Since he came to Italy, has sent four letters to the bishop of Worcester for the King,—three from Bologna, and one from Venice. Had previously sent the Greek of Basil without commentaries, and afterwards the same with commentaries. It is quite plain, from the commentaries of Zonaras, that this is the letter which Basil means, which they send in a notary's hand. Sends duplicates of Hebrew writings by Mark Raphael, who is paid a salary by the Venetian government, two writings by Helias, a Hebrew, doctor in arts and medicine, in which the former proves that Deuteronomy refers to the genealogy of the Saviour, and the latter to inheritance, and is only observed by the Hebrews under certain conditions. Has sent Latin translations of these by father Francis, and writings by him to the bishop of Worcester, who will send copies to Stokesley and the King. Those who have subscribed Helias' writings are Benedict, a German, of great weight among the Jews for his years and learning, and Calo, a doctor of arts and medicine, whose books will be sent to the King. Several doctors, lecturers, and preachers have subscribed to the opinions of Francis. Will send names by the next messengers. Hopes to obtain the writings of the King's chief opponent. Complains of want of money. Sent a fortnight ago new writings of Helias and Marc Raphael, translated into Latin by father Francis; of which one is to prove that the King's marriage is impious, and ought to be dissolved, and the other affirms that the Rabbis consider that Deuteronomy refers to inheritance. Sends some extracts made by father Francis from the Chaldaic commentaries that the Levitical prohibitions are part of the law of nature. The King will also receive letters from Thomas Omnibonus at Venice, with the names of doctors whose subscriptions Croke has seen, "et nobilis illius Mediolanensis Francisci Crucini utriusque juris doctoris . . . . . in scripturis atque Hebraica lingua, ut audio, doctissimi ad patrem [Francis]-cum literas, catalogumque doctorum quos ille rogatu Francisci Medio[lanensis] paravit non sine longe majoris muneri[s] spe modo . . . . . reque adesse pecunia posset qua oblatas operas . . . . . non defuerit audeo ego capitis periculo . . . . . theologos paucis illis exceptis quos metus Pontificis et Cæsaris magis contra te con . . . . . quam premium, jam, invictissime rex, si hæc in Italia tempestiv[e] . . . . . fuissent tentata, quos habuissemus adversum nos, immo qu[os] non habuissemus nobiscum bonos et doctos theologos, cum jam turba . . . . . metu Cæsaris et Pontificis rebus tot undique tam eruditi et pii theologi ad patrocinium nostræ causæ turmatim* et vel . . . . . ultro convolent." Many think the case is Croke's; and if they promise help so promptly for a private man, what would they do for the King? He would obtain no less favor from the Italians than the Emperor would have, and much more than the Pope. Owes all he has done to the aid of father Francis and his nephew, and of Dominico of Treviso. It has been the more difficult to get books because those who had mutilated them were afraid of the discovery of their fraud. Venice, 11 March.

Vit. B. XIII. 60 b. B. M.
Wonders that he has received no answer to his frequent letters. Is in want of money, as the good Bishop is often in want himself. Is obliged to consult him, though so many miles away. Could obtain more than 100 subscriptions if the King would send him letters of exchange. The country does not suit him. Asks his correspondent to procure his recal. Knows he will be pleased with his letters to the King, so he does not send a copy. Desires to be commended to the Bishop. Knows that some are trying to lessen the Bishop's opinion of Croke through envy. Desires the increase of his diets, and credit at a bank here (ut hic nobis mensa pateat), as there are more books to be got here than at Rome. Venice, 11 March.

Has received his reply by the messenger of De la Morette. Thanks him for his good offices with the French king, for whose offers Casale is grateful. Whether in England or elsewhere, will always be ready to serve him. Has done his best in England to procure that the "gran scudiere" of England shall be sent there (to France) as ambassador. Gioachino should be instructed to speak to Casale's agent there (in England) on the subject, and through him to propound the matter to the duke of Norfolk, who is Casale's good lord, the agent being a confidant of the Duke's. If Mons. lo Grande (Scudiere?) cannot come, they should endeavor to find another person of equal rank. Has certain important affairs in Lombardy, and desires Montmorency to write to Cagnino Gonzaga, directing him to favor Casale against his adversary there. The duke of Ferrara has been here four days. The Emperor is to depart on Thursday the 17th. The English ambassadors will be here tomorrow or the next day. Bologna, 12 March 1530.

My last was dated London, "el Marzo*," 1530. The original of this was sent that day to your Majesty by the ordinary post. Nothing has since occurred requiring me to write at great length. This King has been certified of the Emperor's coronation at Bologna on the 24th ult., and was informed at the same time that he meant straightway to pass into Germany. He again presses his request to have the opinions of the faculty of Paris in favor of his cause. The cardinal of York is now near Richmond, and earnestly entreats your Majesty and Madame to help him in his need, remembering the services which he rendered to you at opportune times; adding, that if you and Madame help him, as he not only hopes but fully expects, by keeping your promise to him, in proportion to the greatness of his fall, this will be the greater demonstration of your bounty. 21 March. Vit.B.XIII.61. B. M. 6280. [CROKE to ———.]

Received today at noon his letters, stating that he had not received the epistle which Croke mentions. Packed up separately all that went to "you," though open, to be looked at by the bishop of Worcester, who has helped him with money, though not so plenteously as the business requires. The Bishop has been destitute himself through the infidelity of merchants, and for other causes, so that we stand at a stay with the great multitude of whom we were assured in Milan and other places, and are like to lose many by the solicitation of Campegius, who procures for the Queen against the King all the friends he can. Will never meddle in such a matter again, without a letter of bank for a sum sufficient to defray the expences. Sends by this bearer many more annotations with the said epistle. Some things therein are more pertinent than they appear. The copy is signed by a notary, got by the help of father Francis and his nephew, Dominico of Treviso, who is of the greatest house in Venice, and very learned in Greek and Latin. Trusts by his help to get a sight of "th'olde boke off Venice." Has seen letters written hither for old books, whatever they cost, by a doctor, who is one of the Emperor's council against the King. There is in the hands of the Greeks a book of the Councils in Greek, "a[nd] other things, which I might once [have] o[btained for] 40 crowns, after for * * * we have it or no, our enemies shall not have it, albeit they would give 2,000 crowns." Aleander has another. On Friday last he came to father Francis, partly entreating, partly threatening him, to win him from the King, but in vain. This shows that but little can be hoped for from the library at Rome, of which he is keeper. Thinks that the search must be made here. 21 March, Venice.

Does not send the epistle with annotations, because he doubts the messengers, but sends the epistle alone, from a different copy from that sent to the King.

The Bishop is wonderfully deceived. He told Croke to take up 100 crs., and the merchant promised to pay it, but now answers that he will pay no more. Is in great need, and has not enough either to tarry or depart. The merchant says that he has often had secret orders from the Bishop's brother to give Croke money little by little; which is the cause of the stoppage of many enterprises.

Vit.B. XIII. 64. B. M.

Thanks him for his dispensation. Has complained to the King about his want of money. More than seven weeks passed between the first and second time that Ghinucci sent money, so that he has been obliged to borrow 60 gold pieces, of which he had spent the whole before Ghinucci's brother sent him more money. Has also paid at his brother's orders 80 cr. to father Francis and other doctors, in the King's business. The merchant would only give him 30, saying that Ghinucci had told him not to pay Croke more than 25 a week. Does not know whether he will pay any more without fresh orders. Ghinucci desires him and Francis to send some fit person to whom payments can be made, but being here unknown Croke does not dare trust any one. The merchant makes him come to and fro every day, to no purpose, and to the great injury of the King's affairs. Francis is not strong enough to go on foot, and could not ride at our expence. Seems about to lose all the hopes he had, for want of money. A great man who owes much to the King is soliciting several theologians against the King. Assures him that the King will repay what money he advances to Croke. If the King will not trust him with more money than his diets, he is not fit for such business in Italy, "maxime ubi t . . . . . nobis moras molestiasque vigerent quottidie Pontificis Cæsaris[que] . . . . . metus, quod si paulo tempestivius ista longe alia fuisset r . . . . . conditio, nec dubitassem ante omnes Italiæ theolog[os] . . . . . conciliasse cum tot idque ex optimis sic turba . . . . . sincere operam suam polliceantur, quod de . . . . . admonuerat dominatio" * * * Finds few like Francis, whether

After his departure the ambassadors of the king of England had an audience of the Pope, who sends an account of it to the bearer, Nicholaus de Aragona, auditor of the palace, to be communicated to the Emperor. according to Holy Scripture, not one in which a dispensation could be granted. The question was, the Pope's authority, and whether he could dispense in that. They proposed to submit the case to an assembly of prelates and doctors, on condition that if it was favorable to the King, the Emperor would promise to conform to it; but they would not make a like promise for Henry. A brief was sent to him, at the instance of the Queen's proxy, forbidding a second marriage before the Pope had given a sentence. This should be executed at Calais. The Emperor informs his minister in England of this by a despatch, dated Modena, 23 March 1530, the day after his departure from Bologna. A paragraph, dated Mantua, 25 March, is added, stating that the Emperor has just received a letter from the Pope, saying that the English ambassadors, after complaining of insults, required the citation to be annulled, or that it should be delayed till September. The Emperor did not object to this delay, but was resolved to execute the brief.

Vit.B.xiii.65. B. M. Since writing last, has often been to John de la Fossa for the remaining 70 [crowns], which he refused to pay in consequence of orders from Ghinucci's brother that he should pay the remainder to the Prothonotary. Summoned him to law about it, but he repeated what Croke has already written. Was very anxious at this, as the estimation in which he was held seemed likely to be in danger, and also because he would be suspected of neglect in the King's business, and left to perish of hunger. Succeeded in borrowing of a merchant, to whom he owes no small sum. "Quæ omnia ita [me mæstum] reddiderant ut dolori meo temperare non potuerim ve . . . . . credere fuisse aliquem in Joanne de la Fossa dol . . . . . mihi septuaginta ex judicio coactus rogaret ne . . . . . facerem quod mihi coram testibus dixit . . . . . literis et præsent . . . * * * dixerat verum, eoque scribebam paulo acerbius." Apologizes for it, but he was afraid that he had lost Ghinucci's friendship by no fault of his own.

Spent 30 cr. at Milan, that Crucinus might gain his friends; of which he borrowed 22 from Dominico, nephew of Francis. We have most of the names which he promised, and we expect to get from friar Thomaso the writings of a formidable enemy. Will give a few gold pieces to Hebrews who have promised to write in proof of the following points: That the law in Deuteronomy relates only to inheritance, and to the case of Salphaad in the last of Numbers; that the marriage of Thamar with the sons of Judah was not consummated; that the Levitical law is of the law of nature, and always in force, being imposed on all, though Deuteronomy was imposed solely on the Jews; that Deuteronomy does not hold good where a Levitical prohibition opposes it, or except in the circumstances mentioned.

Has spent more than Ghinucci would believe on scribes, librarians, and friars, but not more than necessary. Asks him to obtain his recal, as he cannot be of much service to the King, either here or at Rome. Venice, 26 March.

Vit. B.XIII. 66. B. M.

Hears from Dr. Adam and another that Campegius has solicited and stayed from the King divers of the Grey Friars, whom Croke told the bishop of Worcester that he would have. Their minister had taken 10 cr. from father Francis, promising him the subscriptions of all his friars to the number of 20. After keeping the money three weeks he returned it, saying that he could not perform his promise.

However, we still have some of the doctors of his house, and shall have more. Besides those of Milan, of whom we doubt nothing, we have 10 or 12 doctors of great authority. Hopes to obtain the writings and counsel of one of the King's greatest adversaries, who has solved all our reasons. Asks him to send the copy of the books of the adversaries. These Italians are marvellously crafty with the King, and seem to do much, but really raise all the obstacles they can. Dares not write all he knows. If matters are to go forward, it will be well to trust them in nothing. Asks him to trust no Englishman with this letter. The bearer is a converted Jew, with a stipend of 200 ducats from Venice. 27 March. 6290. The BISHOP OF TARBES to [FRANCIS I.]

Le Grand, III. 394.

I wrote to you lately about the duke of Ferrara and the Pope. Although the Duke when he came was determined not to place in deposit the three towns, he has been persuaded by the Emperor to place Modena; the Pope and he committing to him the judgment of their differences. [Here follows a good deal more upon the same subject.]

I have done great honor to my lord of Rocheford, the English ambassador. I went to meet him, and have visited him often in his lodgings; entertained him, and offered him my services, telling him I was commissioned by you to do so. Nevertheless I have warned him of the Emperor's intention about the marriage, according to the conversation he had with the Pope, which he has found to be true; and two or three times since the departure of the Emperor, I have told the Pope he would do well to speak with Rocheford apart, and tell him the urgency with which I had pressed him, on your account, to satisfy the king of England, telling him I did not ask him to join you two in order to separate himself from the Emperor, but it would not be reasonable that he should be so fast joined to the other as to give occasion for distrust to you, and that it would be quite right that every one, even the Emperor, should know that he had a reasonable regard for you and the king of England. I begged him that he would give Rocheford satisfaction on this point, and show him that your favor had been of service to him. This he thought reasonable, and has promised me to acquaint himself therein, in such fashion that I may make a good report of it to you, and that Rocheford will have great occasion to thank you. I have no doubt they may get from them all the provisions they like, provided they be not decisive of the matter, nor remit it again into England; and, as he has told me more than three times in secret, he would be glad if the marriage was already made, either by a dispensation of the English legate or otherwise, provided it was not by his authority, or in diminution of his power as to dispensation, and limitation of divine law. Rocheford is to leave on Saturday or Sunday next, with the Emperor's answer to do nothing except what shall be acknowledged by justice. The Emperor went very far with Rocheford, saying that he was not to be believed in this case, as he was a party, and several other things. To which Rocheford replied, that what he did was not as a father but as a subject and servant of his master; and that it was enough for his master to have intimated the remorse and scruple of conscience he had that he had so long lived in sin, and how glad he would have been if the Emperor had taken it well; nevertheless his displeasure would not hinder the execution of his intention. And I understand from Rocheford himself that his coming hither will create a stronger affection towards you, in himself and his master. He told me yesterday, he was sure, if his daughter came to be Queen, she would be all her life your very humble servant, well knowing that all their weal depends upon you only.

I know, from what the Pope told me, that the Emperor was not satisfied in the end. It is true that is a matter between themselves; therefore, please let it be kept secret. The evening before Charles' departure, he begged the Pope that he would give him two cardinal's hats besides those he had obtained, saying that he was bound to many great personages, whom he could not satisfy with so small a number of hats. The Pope told him he had done what he could to please him, and that nevertheless he had had the consent of the Cardinals as to the number, obtained as it were by force, and that really he had been obliged by the Emperor's own men, when he was a prisoner, to make cardinals of some who were a disgrace to the College. The Emperor replied that he was aware of the insufficiency of those persons, and was very sorry for it, assuring him that it had not been done with his consent. The Pope did not answer, but says he knew very well the contrary, as he had seen it set forth in the instructions of the Cordelier Cardinal, signed by the Emperor. The Emperor still insisted, and although the Pope told him that since being made Pope he had made no cardinal till now except by constraint, he made no concession. At last he almost reproached him with what he had done for him, saying besides that before he left Trent he would do for him a thing that would deserve six hats. The Pope told him that if he had repulsed the Turk, put Hungary again to rights, and reduced all the Lutherans, he would deserve to have the two hats. At last the conversation broke off, and the Pope says he thinks he will remain satisfied. Next day I conducted them both from their chambers to the lower story, where they took leave of one another, and all the conversation I could hear between them while marching at their heels was that the one wished to lead, and the other refused it. They have both shown the best possible countenance to convey the impression of great friendship.

The chancellor of Spain is more enraged than ever. He has remained ill of the gout in this town, and people say still more tormented with spite. He has not been able to obtain from the Emperor more than a pension of 2,000 ducats upon the archbishopric of Montreal, which the Emperor has given to cardinal Colonna. He has divided that archbishopric and the bishoprics of Segovia and Salamanca among fifteen or twenty, of whom six or seven are cardinals, the largest portion being only 800 or 1,000 crowns. He is determined to leave Antony de Leva as his ambassador with the Pope, notwithstanding that the new Cardinal Confessor remains there, as he has authority in Italy. When you send any one here, you should remember that this place is of great importance. I informed you lately how the Emperor had desired to withdraw the duke of Urbino, but when he came to press him the Duke refused to take his oath, except by command of the Venetians; and moreover told him that when his time expired he would not take part unless he gave him warning, and that if things could be made equal between them he would serve him and take oath. The Emperor told him that when that time arrives he would take oath to him, and restore the duchy which he claims in Naples.

The count de Gayasse has been long here, and the Emperor at length told him that he might retire, as he would not make use of him at present. The duke of Milan has gone, with his fever. Several of his men have told me that he cannot live, and that they desire nothing else than to have you. Not feeling sure of their deeds I have given them words, saying you would not interfere in anything; but they pressed me, at last, hoping that you would at least one day let Signor Maximilian escape from France, and there would be no difficulty then in putting him in possession. All Italy seems anxious that Milan should remain in your hands.

The Emperor complained the other day that you had given some land to the prince of Melphi, which, by the treaty, you ought not to have given to any Neapolitan. I have, therefore, intimated to the sieur Raince that it was not for your service that in going to France he should take (que menast) any "fortissus,"* as it might hinder the deliverance of the children. The Pope will leave on Monday next for Rome. Campeggio is going with the Pope as legate. He shows great desire to do you service, and would be a good means of intimating to the Emperor anything you would not wish should appear to come from you. Bologna, 27 March.

28 March. 6293. Bishop of Tarbes to Montmorency.

Le Grand, III. 454.

According to your instructions I have done my best to entertain my lord of Rocheford. His stay here has not been long, but it might have been shorter if he had chosen. He takes with him the conclusion that the Emperor intends the affair to be determined by justice; that if the marriage with his aunt be found to be null, he will not maintain it, but if it is pronounced valid, he will. Rocheford, when he attempted to reply, was told to leave that to others, as he was a party;—and, to say the truth, he was greatly astonished. At his instance the Pope has suspended the matter for a month and a half, during which term the king of England shall send a commission to proceed in the cause. The Pope says he will prolong the terms still further, provided the King promises not to proceed de facto. When I conversed with Rocheford, disclaiming his great gratitude on account of the command given me by Francis to promote the cause of the king of England, he said there was more need now than ever that the two Princes should continue good friends and brothers. At last, going from one thing to another, he said the English would act for three or four months like those who look at dancers, and take courage according as they see them dancing ill or well. And as they should see Francis do, so would the King his master do. You will understand what these words imply, and manage matters for the king of England according to their own plan. For since he, a father, approves of his master dissembling, it must have been by this conclusion, made before his departure, that he has since received instructions (?) (il faut que ce soit par cette conclusion fait avant son partement que l'on luy ait depuis fait entendre). And it would be well that you should ask aid, for reasons you understand better than I do. These are matters I would willingly leave alone, but they are so important that I must warn you of them.

The bishop of Worcester, auditor of the Chamber, told me, the day before Rocheford's departure, that for the desire he had to serve Francis he would let me know that Francis had promised some benefices to Rocheford, which he advised should be given to him on his return to France, or that, without his speaking about it, Francis should give him a hope of satisfying him shortly. The Bishop said he had great influence in the government, and that he would act sooner for interest than for any other motive.

I presume the children will be in France, and I beg you to remember I am here awaiting my recal. Bologna, 28 March.

6303. THE DIVORCE.

Three letters of Henry VIII. to the university of Oxford, desiring their opinion touching his divorce.

In the first, he commands them, setting aside all untrue and sinister information, to apply themselves to the mere truth, giving credence to the bishop of Lincoln.

In the second, he complains that a great part of the youth of the university, not regarding their duty to their Sovereign, wilfully stick upon their opinion, to have a great number of regents and non-regents associated with the doctors and others, for the determination of this question. "If the youth of the university will play masteries, as they begin to do, we doubt not that they shall well perceive that non est bonum irritare crabrones."

In the third, he complains of their delay, comparing their conduct with that of the university of Cambridge, which had eight days ago sent him a favorable answer. He sends them Mr. Edw. Fox with these letters, to remind them of their duty.

Has just heard from two substantial merchants of Cologne that that city will muster 3,000 horse and 5,000 foot for the Emperor. Will write more at large by Reygnard Wolfe. The secretary of Frankfurt, a learned doctor of the law, has told him that he has received letters saying that the Emperor was going towards Rome, but, hearing of certain treasons prepared by the Pope against him, has returned again to Naples. 4 April. Le Grand, III. 412. 6307. DE VAUX to FRANCIS I.*

The King has informed me that by letters of the earl of Wiltshire of the 18th and 19th ult. the Emperor is more than ever determined on the defence of the Queen his aunt. In conversation the Earl could not get him to yield a point, he declaring that the Pope alone ought to be judge of the cause. On which, at the second or third conference, the Earl took his leave, and will remain at Bologna to justify himself to the Pope, awaiting the expected writings from the King, which will be sent as soon as they are ready, especially those of Paris. Suggests that if payment of Wolsey's pension be demanded by virtue of his surrender (transporto o cession), it may be resisted. The King is much pleased at the promotion of Mons. De Bourges to the cardinalate, and says he and Francis will be able to accomplish many things, and withstand the designs of the Emperor, when they have a good part of the Cardinals. For this reason he proposes to urge the Pope to make for him two cardinals, viz., the auditor of the Chamber and the prothonotary Casal. Complains of the negligence of the posts of

Picardy. Briant continually writes to the King of the great attention shown him by the Grand Master, for which the King expresses his thanks to Francis, saying he does not know whether Briant be more of an Englishman or a Frenchman.

The duke of Richmond is here,—a most handsome, urbane, and learned young gentleman, very dear to the King on account of his figure (forma), discretion, and good manners. He has been summoned by the King from York, where he has been living nearly five years. He is certainly a wonderful lad for his age. He commends himself most humbly to your Majesty, saying he wishes to be a good Frenchman, and to make himself the servant of the Dauphin. The More, 11 April 1530.

The King is writing to Briant, in order that the restitution of the Princes may not be delayed on account of the obligation of 22,000 fl.; that if the Emperor's agents make any difficulty, Briant is to retain the obligation he was to deliver to them, and take an obligation of Francis that he will pay the sum within a convenient period, if within six or eight months the Emperor do not make it appear, either that he is not indebted to that amount, or that, being so, he has paid it. The King says he is so displeased with the Emperor's haughtiness that he has a great mind to recal his ambassador; which, he adds, he is the more induced to do, as he believes it would lead the Emperor to withdraw his, for he is little satisfied with the Imperial ambassador here. He also says if his ambassador with the Pope do not report a good conclusion he intends to settle the matter within his realm by the advice of his Council and Parliament, so as not to have recourse to the Pope, whom he regards as simoniacal and ignorant, and consequently no good father. And he thinks that if he thus refuse to recognize the court of Rome, other kingdoms will do the same. He thinks the difficulties started by the Emperor's agents are only to delay the restitution of the Princes.

Has at length obtained from Wolsey the two quittances for May and December 1528. Will endeavor to obtain the third for May 1529. 4 April 1530.

6308. John Bishop of Lincoln, Edward Foxe, and John Bell to Henry VIII.

Have deferred answering his last letters until they had some certain matter to write. Have today obtained the consent of all the university, that the decision of the doctors and bachelors who were chosen to decide the King's cause should be taken as the determination of the whole university. After the election was finished according to the instrument sent today by Foxe to Mr. Secretary, and after three public disputations in the divinity schools, which they thought a very honorable cause of deferring the act, yesterday Bell and Foxe, with Dr. Coxe and the warden of All Souls, called before them the regents, and told them that the King's indignation at their ungoodly behavior would be mitigated if they would submit to the order devised by the doctors, although in spite of them it must take effect.

Divers of them answered very frowardly; but, on dividing them, 27 were found on our side, and only 22 on the other. This morning, called together the King's friends, and determined to call a convocation in the afternoon; at which, calling apart the faculties of divinity, canon law, civil law, and physic, and then the bachelors of divinity and non-regents, found them all conformable, except 8 or 10, so that the only impediment was in the regents. After consulting with the presidents of the colleges how to attain their good will, called the company of every house together to give their voices in a secret scrutiny, and obtained 37 votes to 25. Immediately caused the commissary to make a decree according to the form enclosed. Tomorrow, will call all the judges together, and after a mass, which the bishop of Lincoln will celebrate, will proceed to the determination, which must be read in convocation, and eight persons chosen to correct it before sealing. Doubts not that it will be sealed in the said convocation, or else the next day. Will then repair to the King, unless otherwise ordered. Oxford, 5 April. Signed.

6309. JOHN CASALE to HENRY VIII.

I have not hitherto written to you, as I received no directions, but I have advertised my brother and the ambassadors at Bologna what I was about. I have also written to the duke of Norfolk and to Guron. Yesterday I received your letters for these signors. When I and Croke think it opportune I will deliver them. I shall proceed in your business with greater freedom; and if I have occasion to send fuller information, I will write to Norfolk and to Guron. Venice, 5 April 1530. Signed.

6310. JOHN CASALE to NORFOLK.

Received his letters, dated 10 March, and conferred upon the contents with Croke, suggesting that he should communicate to me what he thought of the King's cause. It was well done to write to brother Francis, whom I have asked to undertake the King's defence. He will write to the King, and I hope he will be instrumental in inducing others to write on the subject. I will visit the Paduan doctors; and I can do so more freely, as I have the King's commands, and the promise of money from the bishop of Worcester. My brother, Sir Gregory, writes that the bishop of Worcester desires that the letter of Basil be procured, which I have said is in Alcander's possession, and cannot be obtained. I will try what can be done. We shall have many on our side, and two Jews, to one of whom Croke has already spoken, and the other is my great friend, who translated for the Pope and the bishop of Verona certain parts of the Old Testament from Hebrew into Latin. I write to Guro.

After the Emperor left Bologna, the Pope suddenly took his departure. They say he is gone to Rome to collect money for a war against Florence. The duke of Ferrara, at the instigation of the Emperor, has arranged matters with the Pope, and leaves Modena in the hands of the Emperor. He has followed the latter to Mantua. It is rumored that the Turk is raising forces. Venice, 5 April 1530. Signed.

Has obtained from my lord Souch and Arundel's other coparceners in the manor of Sharshelverton, in the parish of Stepleberton, and the ferme of Darneton, Oxon, the grant of a lease of their parts to his servant Edw. Joones, and asks Arundel to do the same. The manor cannot be well occupied by more than one tenant, without great unquietness. Chelchith, 5 April. Signed: Tho. More K., Chauncellour.

Lanz, I. 380. The increase of the Lutherans in Germany may hinder his plan of going thither to hold a diet. Exportation of horses from the Emperor's countries difficult to interfere with. Will arrange for the pay of his ambassador in England, notwithstanding the charges on the Emperor's finances here. The Emperor's sovereignty is not respected in Artois, notwithstanding the treaties of Madrid and Cambray. Is glad of Charles's good will to assist the queen of England. Will make use of the brief sent by the Emperor about her business. Malines, 5 April '29, avant Pasques.

6 April. 6313. RIC. STRETE, Priest, to DR. LEE.

R. O. I received on 4 April a letter from . . . . . [and] from my good master Cromwell, touching . . . . . in Caukewood. The prior of Calwich is dead. Rauf Longforth, who is founder, claims the right of presentation; but we cannot find any such claim in the register. There is but one canon now there; and Dr. Poole and I think that the ordinary ought not to lose his accustomed provision. Longforth has sent to London a canon of Derlegh, with money, to urge his claims. Mr. Justice Fitz[james] says his son Longforth doeth this against his will. Various persons are recommended. Consult with Mr. Cromwell what is to be done. Lich' (Lichfield), 6 April.

7 April. 6315. GERVAIS CAWODD to DR. BELLASIS.

R. O. Wishes to take one of the farmholds of Dr. Bellasis' late brother, about Newburghe, or Blakamore, during the nonage of his son. Is kinsman by the mother's side to his brother's children, and the deceased promised him such a farm in compensation for the injury he had done him about the gentlewoman, and "in laboring your prebend at Hoveden from me." Should like to speak with him about these matters, and "concerning communication betwixt my lord of Durham and me afore Easter." Shakkelwell, 7 April.

7 April. 6316. [CROKE to GHINUCCI.]

Vit. B. XIII. 67 b. B. M. Has received two letters from him, stating that he had sent letters by Paul Cassale, who has not delivered them to Croke, but to his brother, April 4. The latter opened the parcel, and gave Francis a copy of the King's letters to him, before he gave the letters to Croke for Francis. Cassale has thus found out what Francis wrote for the King. He had always told him that he would do nothing without the Pope's leave. Fears Cassale has thus discovered other things which may injure Croke and the King. In answer to his question, whether it is true that the Prothonotary wrote that Croke said a learned German had promised to write for the King, neither knows nor cares what the Cassali write or say. Cares for this, that Ghinucci has sent the most secret matters, and those which specially concern the King. Croke's greatest friend seems as it were to doubt whether he wrote from suspicion or knowledge, which he could not do if all that he wrote has come to the King. If Ghinucci thinks anything ought to be kept back, wishes him to send it to Fox in England, or to Croke at Venice. Fox thanks Ghinucci for his dispensation, and promises to do anything for him with the King or any other. He complains that there is a rumor of its purport throughout the whole court. Knows that neither Ghinucci nor himself spread it, but has never spoken a word about it to any one, except to Ghinucci and Gregory Cassale. Fox warned Croke not to interfere between Ghinucci and the Cassali. This was unnecessary, for, except in the King's cause, which is entrusted to him alone, he has written nothing. "Sed neque scribetur unquam in ea si quid erroris offendam, et tibi (cui unice et fidet et favet rex) et regi ipsi, si opus fuerit, posthabito omni etiam vitæ periculo, communicare non dubitabo . . . . . mo ad literas tuas illas, inquam, quas tu tanta humanitate [et mod]estia, tantus, inquam, pontifex, ad tam pusillum sacerdotem [et nullius] momenti homuncionem scripseras, quas hercle . . . . . tempero quia lachrimer tantum amicum"

From what happened at the trial to which Croke was obliged to summon De la Fossa before he could get his money, thought Ghinucci distrusted him, and ordered De la Fossa to pay no more money without giving him warning. Ghinucci had written to Croke that he must be contented with 25 gold pieces a week, and De la Fossa had shown a letter from Ghinucci's brother giving the same order.

But to return to Ghinucci's letter. He says that he has provided for Croke without commission; but the King told Croke that Ghinucci would supply him; and Stephen promised the King that he would send him letters of bank. Brian [Tuke] wrote that he had sent letters for 2,000 ducats before Ghinucci had paid him any money. Sends a copy of Brian's letters. If there is any mistake, asks him to write him a letter about it which he can send on to the King. Brian's letter will show him that those people speak falsely who think that Croke lives in Ghinucci's house, and that diets are not assigned to him. Wonders that Brian wrote to Ghinucci that the King only allowed Brian 59*l.* for posts, when he writes to [Croke] that the King had willingly granted all the money he asked for posts, which was more than 67*l.* Promises to serve Ghinucci's cause with the King. Has written to the King to complain of the want of money, through the perfidy of the merchants, not through Ghinucci's fault. Forwarded letters of his, complaining of the same thing, and showing his fidelity in the King's affairs. "Scribam proximo nuncio tibi ad regem" * * * Six weeks and three days passed between the first and second receipts of money from Ghinucci. Now asks for all the money which the King wishes to be paid him beforehand, and, in addition, 200 gold pieces of the 2,000 of which Brian writes. Will want them greatly, unless Brian thinks men can be engaged for nothing, and that Croke and his servants can live without food or clothing. Is glad to hear that Ghinucci's brother is recovering his health. Will write in his behalf to the King, and asks him to send the draft of a letter.

Advises him to procure some of the theologians of Sienna for the King, and to write on behalf of his cause to the minister of the Order of Conventuals, John Francis Marino, to whom Croke will forward the letter. Venice, 7 April.

LXV . . ., and also the post money from Venice to Bologna, but Ghinucci writes that their letters to him say that it is only 59*l.*, by which he will lose much. Hopes the King will not abate his diet of 13*s.* 4*d.* by allowance of the post money, for he can scarcely execute his charge therewith. Marvels that when the King willed them to allow him for three months beforehand, they write that if the money he had from Ghinucci was for his posts or diets, he must receive less. Paid his posts with the money he had from the King out of England, and what he had from Ghinucci was for his diets, and was scarcely sufficient for his expences. Besides, he paid more than 200 cr. of it for the King's affairs, of which he will send an account in his next letter. Loses by the ducats which he had from Tuke almost 16*l.* If he has not enough for meat and drink, cannot serve the King. If the merchants and the Bishop had not disappointed him, the King's affairs would have been in a different case, and many obstacles would have been avoided. Has not been able to buy any clothes, and so he sits here in leather . . . . er like a courier. Asks him to repay 450 cr. of the [sun], which he has had from the Bishop by bankers. Venice, 7 April.

6319. W. BENET to BURBRIGE.

Wrote that he had obtained the Pope's signature to Burbrige's supplication, but it was lost between the Datary and him that registers the supplications. Has written to the Datary for it twenty times, offering as large a fee as he could desire, and asking him, if it was lost, to write to Mr. Alexander at Rome, to deliver to Burbrige that which was signed by the Pope, before his Holiness left for Bononye.

Can get no answer but that the supplication shall be found again. Had no copy, and could not therefore get it signed before he left the Pope, and sends the enclosed letter to Jacobo Salviati, asking him to get it done. Wishes to see Burbrige before he goes to England. If he goes by Almain, it would not be much out of his way to go by the Emperor's court, where he will be sure to find Benet. Will provide for him there, and send Jas. Broke with him into England.

Has written to his uncle to pay him the 100 ducats. He will find the Emperor's court either at Isbroke or Ostbrooge (Augsburg). Thinks they will leave this week for Trent, where the Emperor will spend Easter. Asks him to get a pair of caps like Mr. Stephyns, but a little more compass in the crown. 6321. DOCTOR GARAY to CHARLES V.

Some time ago William des Barres sent you a letter of mine relating what had been done in the faculty of theology here, in order that your Majesty might see to the interest of the queen of England your aunt. I sent also the copy of a conclusion, signed by 15 doctors, in favor of the Queen, attested by two notaries, because the original had been taken from me for legal purposes, and not without favor of the King (Francis). I also urged you to procure a brief from his Holiness, commanding these doctors, within six days after its receipt, to meet together, and declare each upon his conscience his own conclusion, sealed with the seal of the faculty. I also thought it well that the King should write to these doctors to the same effect, to avoid scandal, and I wrote the same thing to the Queen and to Madame Margaret, with the same notarial copies. The king of England is making such efforts to procure the divorce as are enough to set the world on fire. Mons. de Langes, who is thought a learned man, brother of the bishop of Bayonne, has got the signatures removed on the pretence "que hazen lo que deben de hazer allegar 10 doctores otras vezes 12, o como pueden entre tanto aparejase el comer despues de comido da la conclusion en favor del dicho rey," viz., that the Pope had no power to dispense. Influenced by shame, fear, bribery, and cajolery, thirty have signed this proposition, including some who had signed in favor of the Queen. Suggests that the Pope should be got to send a man hither who fears God, to inquire into the case and punish the offenders. They tell me the university of Pavia publishes that the Queen is content to have a place appointed for her in the kingdom, and to live as a widow, with an allowance for her board; and that if the Pope will not grant a divorce, the King will, like a man who has been denied justice, appoint judges in his own kingdom to settle the matter. Such are the falsehoods by which they have gained the greater part of the residents in this university. Paris, 9 April 1530.

10 April. 6324. HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.

Theiner, p. 591.

Have received your letter, dated 26 March, in which you beg that, whilst the cause is in suspense, we take no further steps; and you propose, in the event of our compliance, to defer it till September and later, as our ambassadors have informed us. We admit that ostensibly you have professed great kindness, but in deed we are not wholly satisfied. As of late, when we sent you Dr. Stokesley, elect of London, to explain matters as you desired, you refused to hear him; and we know not why, except it was to remain in ignorance of the merits of our cause, and waste the time. True friendship abhors deceit, and the greater our regard for your Holiness the more freedom we have in expressing our regret. We will hope better things for the future. If your Holiness is resolved to put off our cause till September, and no attempts be made on the other side, nothing shall be done by us. Whatever security you will give us we will give the same; and if you should assure your promise by a brief, we will take no steps in the interim, although we experience the pain of suspense. The elect of London, Worcester, Benet, and Gregory, our ambassadors, will explain further. Windsor, 10 April 1530.

11 April. 6325. WILLIAM BUCKMASTER to DR. EDMUNDS, Vicar of Alborne.

Lamb's Camb. Docts. 23.

"Dominica secunda" in the afternoon came to Wyndsore, and to part of Mr. Latymer's sermon, after which I spoke with Mr. Secretary and Mr. Proveste.

1530.

After evensong, delivered our letters in the chamber of presence, all the court beholding. The King and Mr. Secretary read them, but not the letters of determination, though I delivered them with a proposition. His Highness thanked me and lauded our wisdom, and good conveyance in the matter and great quietness. He told me also what he had in his hands for our university, as Mr. Secretary had showed us. "So he departed. But by and by he greatly praised Mr. Latymer's sermon; and, in so praising, said on this wise: 'This displeaseth greatly Mr. Vice-chancellor yonder.' 'Yon same,' said he unto the duke of Norfolk, 'is Mr. Vice-chancellor of Cambridge;'—and so pointed unto me." After the King's departure, the Duke came and welcomed me, saying that the King would speak with me next day. "And here is the first act."

Waited next day till dinner time. At last Dr. Butts brought me a reward, —20 nobles for me, and 5 marks for the younger proctor with me,—saying I should take that for a resolute answer, and might leave the court when I would. Told Mr. Proveste of our answer, who said I should speak with the King after dinner for all that, and brought me to a privy place to wait. At one o'clock the King entered. It was in a gallery, and there were only Mr. Secretary, Mr. Provest, Mr. Latymer, Mr. Proctor, and I. The King talked with us till 5 o'clock. He was scarce contented with Mr. Secretary and Mr. Provest that it was not also determined, An papa possit dispensare, &c. Confirmed what they had already said, that it would never have been so obtained. He then said he would have it determined after Easter; of which we counselled a while. I pray you therefore study, for this our business is not yet at an end, An papa possit dispensare cum jure divino, &c. Had other talk, too long to recite. The King departed, "casting a little holy water of the court," and I shortly took leave of Mr. Secretary and Mr. Provest, with whom I did not drink, nor yet was bidden. On the morrow I departed, thinking more than I said, and being glad that I was out of the court, where, as I both heard and perceived, many men did wonder on me. "And here shall be an end for this time of this fable." All the world cries out on Cambridge for this act, and especially on me, but I must bear it as well as I may. I have lost a benefice by it, which Mr. Throkmeter has often promised me; but now that it has fallen vacant, his mind is turned from me.

Begs Dr. Edmondes to remember him if he goes to the court after Easter.

Since you left Cambridge, parson Dakers, of St. Nicholas Hostell, hurt Christopher, Mr. Secretary's servant; but when I proceeded to enquire into it, he refused me for his judge, saying that I was familiar with Mr. Secretary and Dr. Thirleby. Would not admit his recusation nor appeal, and committed him to ward, but he escaped from the beadle, "and that night there was such a jetting in Cambridge as ye never heard of, with such boyng and crying, even against our college, that all Cambridge might perceive it was in despite of me." The elder proctor would have inhibited me, and prosecuted the appeal, but I would not suffer him. It is made a country matter, and greatly labored, but yet it is approved by the university that no person can refuse the Vice-chancellor's jurisdiction. Mr. Latymer preacheth still, quod æmuli ejus graviter ferunt.

I hear that Oxford has elected certain persons to determine the King's question, and that Mr. Proveste was there in great jeopardy.

Cambridge, in crastino Dominicæ Palmarum. The King desired me to send you word of his pleasure in the said question.

6326. [CROKE to GHINUCCI.]

Asks for money, as the King has told Croke that he would supply him. Does not know how he will recover from the King what he has given to others; but whatever is given to Croke for the King's business cannot be refused. There is no need for him to risk his money with any one but Croke. Will not go away until everything is finished. Matters are going on well, and he perceives that some persons are displeased at it, although they ought to be grateful. Fears that one person may endanger his life. If this happens, the King ought to consider none but Ghinucci responsible, to whom alone Croke has revealed the arts of those who hinder the King's cause under pretence of friendship. Thought that his disagreement with Ghinucci was ended, so that the slight suspicion caused by his departure would not have caused the Bishop to plot against him with the others. If Ghinucci is not his sincere friend, he is not Croke's helper, but a spy upon the King's secrets. Blames him for writing of him contemptuously to father Francis, when his return to Vienna was certain. Deserves to have one offence pardoned, as he has praised his diligence and faith so highly to the King that he could not now accuse him. Asks him why he was so displeased at his departure, and what he could fear, if he had a good conscience. Will explain matters. "Primum omnium, certum erat me statim ad acceptas a te et . . . . . literas respondisse, certum erat meas ad utrumque tibi an . . . . . discessu redditas. Et tamen miratur Stoxleius in . . . . . responsivas non dedisse" * * *

The Count (comes) remains with us a few days and returns; but eight days after, Croke hears nothing from Ghinucci. At last receives letters signifying the order for keeping back the money, very different to what the merchant had said. There was nothing about supplying him, or about the matters on which Croke had consulted him, so that he might feel himself destitute, and be driven to consult the ambassadors. This was the cause of his journey; and he would certainly have departed, if a certain influential senator had not told him that two letters had come from the Venetian ambassador in England, desiring them, in the King's name, to commit the cause to be discussed by the theologians of Venice and Padua, and promising to send two doctors to assist. Matters being thus, Ghinucci has thrown him into great danger; but he forgives him, begging that he will not treat him so again, and that he will extinguish the hatred that he has created against Croke, on the King's account, who cannot do without his assistance here. Cannot help fearing the treachery of those whom Ghinucci either hates or else has spoken falsely of. He must not be surprised at Croke's fear, for he is a stranger here, and has no one to protect him but Ghinucci, who has now ceased to do so. Has one consolation, that the King will hold him responsible. Promises not to act, speak, or write against him, if he will cease from such conduct, and promote the King's cause. Prays that this may be the end of their mutual suspicions. * * *
"tam tecum quam cum aliis dissimulare ut nullum possis habere cer[tius] meæ in te constantissimæ amicitiæ symbolum quam quod cæsus exca . . . . . et libere jurgem." Advises Ghinucci to procure the appointment of friar Thomas Omnibonus as general of his Order, which would greatly further the King's cause. He would then, doubtless, procure all the Dominicans, except those few who, as he hears, have already pronounced against the King at Rome. Asks for more certain information about this, and how many friends Ghinucci has procured at Rome. Asks for 400 cr. more, for 200 diets which the King wishes to be paid beforehand, and another 200 for his business. Venice, 11 April.

Could not obtain from De Cassalis information of the time when he would deliver the King's letters to the Senate. Urged him to deliver them on Wednesday. He postponed it till Thursday, then to Friday, and finally delivered them on Saturday.

As the King has written nothing about Croke to the Senate, and as he cannot show to the Senate his letters from the King without endangering his friends, he does not know how to obtain the answer which the King wants. Intends to go this Easter, that is on Wednesday, to see the bishop of Verona, and give him Ghinucci's letters.

Lat., draft, pp. 3.

Vit.B.XIII.72. B. M.

De Cassalis gave him yesterday the letters "quas tu ad me rem . . . . . miseras, sed nullo signo obsignatas." Could not induce him to deliver the King's letters before Saturday, or in public, or to commend him to the Senate, as ambassador from the King. He showed Croke Ghinucci's Italian letters, which relieved him from great fear, seeing that Ghinucci wrote to others to express his vexation and fear at Croke's departure. Feared that he would put Croke in great danger, merely from undeserved suspicion. His fear was increased because Ghinucci gave the King's letters to Paul de Cassalis to be carried to his brother, and by him given to Croke. By this means De Cassalis obtained a copy of all the King's letters, and suspects that the King distrusts him, and therefore envies Croke.

"Sed et archana nostra fere omnia ex adversar[iis] regis ad Franciscum noscens metuere nos coegit ne is magni alicujus mali ex hoc nobis author esset et tibi ejus culpa computaretur," as Ghinucci, contrary to the King's orders, sent him the royal letters, knowing that he would open the packet. Wonders the more at this, as Ghinucci at other times was at enmity with him. Would be silent about this, if he wished to be revenged on Ghinucci for his conduct, but he will bear anything rather than injure the King's cause. Writes openly, and hopes that this will be the last day of their suspicions. Is not ungrateful, nor as prone to revenge an offence as to expostulate. Can be either mild or bitter with enemies, but a friend's kindness is everlasting. The jewels which Ghinucci's brother gave him are still before his eyes. Has not forgotten the dispensation, which Ghinucci obtained for him gratis, nor the letters he wrote to the King commending him. As Ghinucci asks others about his departure, will tell him the truth, that he was compelled to it by Ghinucci's slowness and negligence; for when Croke had consulted him about many important matters, he promised to reply after the arrival of the Count (Comitis), but yet did not write to Croke for 10 days after the Count had left, and sent no money, except what Croke wrung from De la Fossa by law. "Addo quod scripseras mirari Stoxleium me . . . . . literas nihil respondisse cum statim ab acceptis discedere" * * * Received no warning of this from Ghinucci, and did not think that he ought to wait longer when deprived of all help and advice. Had nothing to live on, and knew not where to get anything, and had executed successfully his instructions. Does not see that his going was an injury to Ghinucci; and would have gone, if he had not met a senator, who told him the Venetian ambassador in England had written to the Senate to say that the King was sending two doctors to discuss his cause, and asked that the theologians of Padua and Venice might be allowed to express their opinions.

Asks him not to write to those whose friendship he has obtained from the King, so as to make them suspect him. Requests him to send the remaining 200 cr. which the King assigned for his diets, and 200 of the 2,000 cr. which Brian provides. Will let him know what he writes to the King. 11 April.

6328. [CROKE] to FOX.

Vit.B.XIII.73. B. M.

Thanks him for the pains he has taken for him. Never spoke a word [about Fox's] dispensation, except to the Bishop and Gregory de Cassalis, who, as appeared by his letters sent from Bologna by the Bishop, doubtless disclosed all Croke's and Fox's secrets to Carrew, Boner, and others, like a light dissembler, pretending to help, but really doing all the hindrance he could. There was no need for Fox to warn him not to interfere between Gregory and the Bishop. Will not meddle with any of them, except for the furtherance of the King's causes. When he found any obstacle in them, wrote to the Bishop for advice, according to his instructions. There is great labour here by the Emperor's friends to cause the Sena[te] to refuse the King's petition, or to put him off till the Emperor has left Mantua. Notwithstanding, the King has many a heart in Venice, in no town more, but they marvellously fear the Emperor. Spent on the post to Bologna 67*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.* beside the posts to Venice from Bologna. If the King allows his bill, as Fox and Brian write that he has, the money which he has had from the Bishop must be for his diets, which, at a mark a day, is scarcely enough for bare meat and drink. Here everything is dear, and men must be entertained to know their minds. By conversation at dinner he recovered for the King those who were alienated, "and d . . . . . the care whereof was so great that I neither [had any] leisure nor was able to buy me or my . . . . . anything for our body sauf only" * * * Tuke says that if the money Croke had from the Bishop was either for posts or diets, he must now have less. Asks whether, when he had spent all his money in posts, it is not reasonable that he should have money for meat and drink. Assures him that he is so hungerly handled that he cannot do the King the service that he might. Before the Emperor's coming, if he and the Bishop had not wanted money, the King had had all Italy on his side in this cause. Has not received his full diets for times past, as he has laid out 200 cr. of the Bishop's money on the King's business, and has borrowed money from Hervell, without whose help he could not have served the King. The King desires him to have 20*s.* a day for three months beforehand, but he has no more than 300 cr. Asks him to consider the nature of Italians, who will neither give nor do without money; his necessity, as he has nothing of his own; the vicinity of the Emperor and the great enemies of the King's cause; and to intercede with the King for more money for his own meat and drink and the King's affairs, the niggard handling of which has lost them many, and will lose more, unless remedy is found. Doubts not that he would gain many more if the Emperor were gone. All the learned and good men with whom I have spoken favor our part.

6329. ROBERT BROWN to WOLSEY.

R. O. I have received your letter desiring that I should see your manor of Southwell repaired against your coming. I have got ready faggots for the kitchen, bakehouse, and brewhouse, and have ordered the mason to work the doors of your gallery, according to your pleasure. I have also sent one of the King's glaziers to glaze your lodgings, gallery, &c., and caused locks to be made for the servants' doors and houses. As for casting of your gallery with lime and hair, according to the direction of Mr. Holgill, your surveyor, there are no workmen here that can work in that matter. As for covering the houses above head, and dressing the walls where necessary, it shall be done. As for your command that I should help my lord of Welbeke to provide corn for bread and drink for your household, I have no experience in that matter. Your servant, Mr. Constable, can show you that it has pleased God to visit me with sickness ever since Christmas, so that I cannot stand, and I do not expect to live. 6330. Wm. Capon to Wolsey.

On leaving Wolsey, went to Ipswich, caused God's service to be maintained in the college, and paid all the wages, which, with other expences since his last account, amount to 104*l.*, which he has borrowed on his plate. The rents are hard to be levied, for the tenants say they know not who are to be their landlords. The monastery of Bromehill has lately been sequestered from them by the King's commandment, so that nothing will be received either from Bromehill or Wykes till the King's pleasure is known. Has no profit from Cheshunt, Sayscourt and Mountjoy. My lord of Norfolk has Felixstowe, Faltynham, and the New Marsh. The bishop of Norwich has sequestered St. Matthew's and the oblations of Our Lady's chapel.

Does not see how the present company can be maintained, for the revenues are not above 300*l.* a year. Asks whether they shall break up the choir, or retain only sufficient for Our Lady's mass and one anthem every night, till they know further of the King's pleasure. Are put to great trouble and charge for the rents resolute and pensions of vicarages of the monasteries lately in the hands of the dean of Wolsey's college in Oxford, viz., Wykes, Dodnash, Tiptree and Snape; for the dean never paid the resolutions and pensions, so they are all laid to their charge, and are so great that they cannot pay them. Asks him to order the said dean to pay them, or else to allow Capon to call the dean before my lord Chancellor.

His servant shall attend on Wolsey to know his pleasure. From your Grace's college in Ipswich, 11 April. Signed.

The affair of the divorce had been quite despatched at Paris, as it had already been at Orleans, by the means employed by my brother, which were such that Francis satisfied the one party without spoiling anything with the other. People are dissatisfied with what he has done "contre ce que son labeur et dispence requeroit;" but as he will have to bear the blame of every bribe (loyer) I expect he will not forget himself so far as to meddle with it any more (plus se y amuser), and I hope it will be known that he does not serve two masters. For though in benefits he is less bound to the one than I think he would be, he is nevertheless so much bound already that he would be too wicked to communicate his service to the other. Of two or three despatches to Liset, nothing has come to my knowledge, so that I cannot tell you the present state of affairs. HIER. GHINUCCI, BISHOP OF WORCESTER, to [CROKE]—cont.

Has spoken to Sir Gregory about writing to the general of the Friars Minors, for the King wishes more of them to act separately. Advises that the assistance of the Prothonotary should be used, because, as he is the King's ambassador there, it will be an insult to act without him, and it might be doubted that they had received such orders from the King, as it would seem probable that he would manage his business through his ambassadors. Writes to tell him what he has heard concerning the Cardinal's departure towards the North.

It has been reported in the court that he rode in such sumptuous fashion that some men thought he was of as good courage as in times past, and that there was no impediment but lack of authority. Certain people came to him, some for debt, and some for restitution of things wrongfully taken by him; to which he answered that the King had all his goods, and he could neither pay nor restore. Thinks it would be wisdom for him to have himself "in godde a vatte vatte vordeys passeys hyme" (in good await what words pass him), and specially in the afore-mentioned case. Thanks him for his letters and for his zeal in commending her cause to the Pope. Trusts everything to God, who, she hopes, will remedy the evils in this kingdom and Christendom, though the business seems to have no end. Fears that his vicar on earth does not wish to remedy them. The heretics here think the Head and Protector of the Church will give the Church a great fall. Can do no more, as she has written to his Holiness, than tell him the truth, and show him the evils which are imminent. If these means fail, will complain to God, because there is neither faith nor charity in his ministers on earth. Has seen a copy of the Pope's brief, and shown it to learned persons, who say that she requires a stronger medicine to cure her wound, and that remedy is the sentence. Add. MS. 28,579, f. 389. B. M.

Mention the propositions of the English ambassador to the Signory, to have the affair of the King's marriage examined by the lawyers of the university of Padua. Have not thought fit to urge the Signory to prevent it, lest the king of England should say that the Emperor tried to stop discussion. The English ambassador resident with the Emperor, and he who has gone to be with the Pope, have written to the bp. of Quieta (Chieti), who is in retreat here (que esta aqui muy retrahido) leading a holy life; to whom they send an Englishman to inform him of the whole of this business, and of the causes which move the King to put his bad design in execution. on which they desire that he will send his opinion. The Bishop, although the Emperor knows what he is, acted in this matter like a reasonable man, declaring that the King had no case, even without asking what had to be said for the Queen.

To make his answer the more effective, he sent to Rodrigo Niño for information before the prothonotary came, and I have informed him of the reasons alleged on your Majesty's side, and of all that the bishop of Burgos has told me about it. Venice, 15 April 1530.

Has received his letter, dated Peterborough, the 12th, asking leave to occupy for a time Magnus' house at Sibthorpe, his own at Southwell being out of order. Will have to give up for a season his house at St. James', in consequence of the expences he has sustained in the North, "with such recompense as your Grace can consider," and the King's laws are now so strait he must lie on one of his benefices. But, as Wolsey knows, he has only two in his diocese, viz., Sibthorpe, and a poor benefice of 20 marks in the far parts of Yorkshire. Will have to go to the former, which is unmeet for Wolsey, unless Magnus were there to receive him for a short time, in default of a better lodging. It has but three chambers suitable for lodgings, the rest being applied to corn and husbandry, by which his priests and servants are maintained. "And thither I have refuge for livery of mine horses, which, as the law proceedeth now, cannot be remedied by taking anything to farm for mine own ease." Has not sufficient lodging even for his servants when he goes thither; but, if Wolsey pleases, he shall have "the hall, kitchen, buttery, and pantry, all in one, the cellar, a little dining chamber, two chambers, one within another, and a chapel; and the nether end of the hall to be reserved for myself against my coming." On Easter Day last (17 April), received your letters, dated Peterborough, 15 April, wondering we do so long tarry here, and stating that the wind and weather were propitious with you. They are not so with us. You allege that the masters and mariners of our ships are, at this feast of Easter, at home with their wives and children, and that is the reason of our long abode. I have been with Mr. Sayntclere, living twelve miles off, who has also urged the mariners to speed. [*It will be Lammas or I can receive any part of my rents in these parts, which shall be the least to defray such expences as I shall sustain in the meantime.] My houses be, by the oversight, despoil, and evil behavior of such as I did trust, in such ruin and decay, as well in the roofs and floors [*which be almost ready to fall down,] as in all other implements of household, that [*the whole] a great parti of the portion assigned unto me to live with for one year will scantily, in a very base and mean fashion, repair and make the same mete to be inhabited." Vit. B.XIII.74. B. M. Received his letters on 4 April. The same day delivered the King's letters to father Francis, who showed Croke a copy of them from the ambassador here, to his marvellous discomfort; for, to prevent the inconvenience that would assuredly have happened, Croke always told him that he had not written and would not write in the King's favor, without licence from the Pope or the Senate.

The ambassador broke open the packet addressed to Croke, and detained the copies of letters from his brother and the bishop of Worcester to the bishops of Verona and Chieti. He saw by the copy of the King's letters to the Senate that the King desired no credence to be given to Croke, who had no means to gain credence but by showing the King's letters to himself, and that by showing them Croke would bring father Francis into danger, and cause others to fear favoring the King's cause; he therefore would not procure Croke any credence at the Senate, nor inform him when he would deliver the King's letters, nor would he deliver them before April 10. "At the which delivery he, as he said, had obtained [that] none other should be present but such as he na[med . . .] I think and trust that in recom-[pense] of his old negligence he wol so order . . . . . connuance that there shall appear" * * * Croke, being privily informed of his going to the Senate, went with him. He secretly spoke in Italian to the Duke, telling Croke afterwards that he said to the Duke that Croke was sent only to solicit him. The Duke's answer was that they had so much business that they could not answer the King's letters till afterwards. Perceives that he is sorely annoyed and jealous that the King ordered him only to deliver the letters, and Croke to obtain the answer. Fears not only bodily harm, but secret impediment of the King's causes, which Croke has almost brought to the desired effect. Venice, 23 April.

6353. THE KING'S LETTERS.

R. O. Records of the Reformation, I. 296. "Tenor literarum Regiarum missarum, ut scribit Wigorniensis, ad se et reliquos oratores."

It will be expedient to hire as many Italian doctors as possible to defend the King's cause against opponents. As theologians are rare here, who do not live in or profess religion, it would be advisable to gain as many provincials of the Orders as possible. The theologians should be urged to assert that the prohibition, being of divine law, cannot be dispensed with; and the jurists, to assert at least that it is of divine right, if nothing more can be obtained from them. It is most necessary that as many theologians and jurists as possible should be engaged to assist, and those who disagree, not to oppose. Attempts must be made to gain as many as possible to his Majesty's side, by help of friar Francis George, so that he may conquer by numbers as well as by justice and truth. The sayings of the Jews about Deuteronomy and Leviticus, and whatever else can be found anywhere to aid the cause, must be sent with the greatest diligence to his Majesty. They are to write to the bishops of Chieti and Verona to assist. Although he has hitherto desired everything to be done secretly, now that friar Francis suspects, it is thought better first to find out the opinion of the persons to be engaged, and then to treat with them by name, propose a reward, and promise gratitude, which his Majesty will, without doubt, perform; and he trusts that the disclosure of his name will make them more ready to serve him.

The doctors of the canon law must write concerning the divine character of the prohibition; and those engaged for his Majesty must be carefully examined about the falsity of the brief, the sufficiency of the bull of dispensation in consequence of the minority [of the King], during which he could not prefer a supplication, and on account of his subsequent refusal. All means must be tried to obtain the approval of the University. The King writes to the signory of Venice and Francis George; of which letters copies are enclosed. He writes to the prothonotary Casale to present the letters to the Signory, to whom their ambassador in England also writes. All the above he sends as extracts ([excer]pta) from your Majesty's letters, with this title, "Tenor literarum regiarum."

Vit. B. XIII. 83 b. B. M. [Sends] the subscriptions which he promised, copied from the originals by Thomas Omnibonus, prior of the Venetian Dominicans. Will bring the originals himself, to avoid the danger of sending them by a messenger. Sent lately to him new writings in Hebrew in defence of his cause, the letter of Basil, with commentaries, and some other Greek writings, authenticated by a notary. Sends now all the Greek writings again, and many extracts from the catena of Greek commentaries on the Old Testament. Some of the extracts are what were alleged by their opponents, and some will not seem applicable at first, but their purpose will hereafter appear from the writings of learned men for the King. Friar Paulinus, of the order of Reformed Dominicans, writes on the King's side, in Greek and Latin, and his writings will be subscribed by some others whom the King owes to the bishop of Verona. Not one of these will write without leave from the Pope or the superior. The bishop of Verona has ordered his vicar not only to favor the King's cause, but in his absence to assemble theologians, and urge them to write. He himself will subscribe. He has written to the bishop of Chieti, who replied that he had always venerated the King, but dared not meddle with this business; he advised the King to procure from the Pope permission for theologians to discuss the case, by which the King would gain, as he has justice on his side. Asked the bishop of Verona to write to the King; but he said that it was not fit for him to write first to such a great prince, and, in case the Pope asked him, he wished to subscribe in consequence of the justness of the cause, and not from favor to the King. His vicar and all the lawyers have asked Croke for the bull and the dispensation, but he cannot obtain from the ambassador or from the bishop of Worcester either the bull or the brief, or any book on either side of the cause. Is sure they have them, as appears by their writings. By Croke's help alone, the King has gained father Francis and father Thomas Omnibonus, and, by their influence, not only those mentioned in the last letter, but all those whose signatures are annexed.

Many whom Francis has obtained are not there, as he is now absent on the King's business. He also gained Simonetus, the public reader of theology at Padua, whom all the theologians of the Signory venerate as a god. Expects that tomorrow he will write to the King, as he promised Croke and Leonicus, and in three days he will send the book on the King's cause. Has engaged also John Francis Marinus, minister of the Conventuals at Venice and provincial here. "[Habeo] penes me ipsius syngrapham qua se obligat omnibus viribus . . . . . rum jure divino, naturali et morali, Papæ indispensabili . . . . . relictam a fratre, frater ducat et etiam paraturum quotquot" * * *

As the King ordered, communicated everything sincerely to the bishop of Worcester. Before engaging John Francis Marinus, asked the Bishop to write secretly to him to encourage him to obtain others. He communicated this to Gregory de Cassalis, and they wrote back to Croke jointly. Would not have known what hindrance they caused, if Francis had not sent for him, and, full of fear, asked him to return his bond, and take back the money, saying that the ambassador had asked him to write for the King, which he said he refused. Does not know whether he did so, but the ambassador tried to persuade Croke not to press for an answer, for the Senate might refuse permission, as he said he had heard from his friends, and every one would then refuse to serve the King. Marinus said also that he had been warned by many Venetian nobles and chief men not to meddle with this cause, for the Signory would be much displeased with any one who assisted the King. He besought Croke to return the bond, promising to do much more when the Senate had once granted permission to speak freely. If these complaints are true, how secretly must the ambassador have managed the King's business? Any one can see his falseness. The friar put no faith in Croke's promise of secresy, and said that if he did not return the bond he would deny that it was his. Considered therefore that his bond would be the best proof to the King that many would support him, if they had no fears. Thought it best to keep this pledge of his fidelity, and replied that he could not return it without great danger to himself; for he had a commission to engage all the persons he could, but not to set any free. After communication with the bishop of Worcester, he put confidence in Croke, and entrusted everything to Herwell to be sent to the King. "Est autem iste hic et pro se et pro Farniano illo." Wishes the Cassali (isti) were as diligent in obtaining new persons as in soliciting those already obtained. This Easter the Prothonotary went to Omnibonus, the prior of the Dominicans, and obtained from him a conclusion, not of much profit. The bishop of Worcester wrote that Gregory de Cassalis asked of him 50 crowns he had left with Crucinus * * * Why then should Cassale wish to pay him 50 gold pieces, when he is already so well paid, unless he wishes to spend the King's money uselessly, and cheat the industry of others? To deceive his hopes sends a long work by Crucinus, formerly sent to Francis. Sends also a copy of the formula of Crucinus, of which he keeps the autograph, signed and sealed by seven doctors. If Francis were here, would send the writings of two noted theologians against the King, which he has obtained through Crucinus. Sees much fraud everywhere. If he had funds, or could go where he pleased, his diligence would be much more profitable to the King. Despairs of obtaining admission to the library at Rome; for Alexander, the keeper of it, is the King's most bitter enemy. Can purchase for 60 gold pieces one of the oldest books of the Greek Nomocanones and the letters of Basil, but he waits for the King's orders. 23 April.

24 April. 6355. The EARL OF WILTSHIRE to HENRY VIII.

R. O. St.P. VII. 234.

By the Almoner, who now goes to you, you will know how stiffly the Emperor is set against your cause. He is much guided by the Chancellor, who affirms that the greatest number of divines is against you; and his ambassador in England is led the same way. The Pope is governed by the Emperor, and the Italian divines will support his authority. They are dissatisfied with the Emperor's conduct in Italy, for he has pleased his enemies, and done nothing for his friends. There is great dissension between the Spaniards and the Almains. If the Emperor should fall out with the French king, I think the former would seek to you. When I go to France I shall learn more. I keep with me Alexander, the messenger. 28 April. 6360. FRANCIS CRUCINUS to ———.

R. O.

Commences with a string of biblical quotations concerning kings. Does not think that kings ought to be judged without being heard. Knows but little of the case. The King's cause runs upon this rock, that it seems to be impossible to have legitimate children when he makes this complaint. The contention about his heir is known, perhaps, only to God, and to him to whom he has revealed it. It is a Divine judgment. The King, and his kingdom too, are brought into great danger. On one side, an unhallowed connection; on the other, the weakening of leagues sought to be made with other Christian princes by marriage, under papal authority. The latter is of great moment, now that Christendom is so disturbed by wars and heresies. God acts and judges while men are disputing about his judgments. Fears that while men sincerely and purely wish to retract the dispensation, sin may be increased by withdrawing the shield of dispensation, and the Divine judgment provoked. Milan, 28 April 1530.

6364. The DUKE OF CLEVES.

"Pro Serenissima Regia Majestate Angliæ instructio Hermanni Rinckes, equitis aurati, consiliarii C. M^tis^."

1. Recommends the King to strengthen himself by a matrimonial alliance with some prince of these parts in case of war with France, Spain, or Burgundy. 2. Urges especially an alliance with the duke of Cleves, who possesses three most powerful duchies and two earldoms, and many towns not only strong but populous. If England were in danger he could alone raise an army sufficient to defend it; and he is descended from the same stock as the kings of England, as will be shown by a genealogy. 3. The Duke has but one son, though he has three daughters. His son is fifteen years old, of middle height, brown complexion, sound in body and limbs, well learned, and speaks Latin and French. His name is William, undoubted heir of the duchies of Cleves, Juliers, and Berg (Montensis), the earldoms of March and Ravenspurg. By the death of Philip de Cleve, who died in Brabant without children, he came into possession of the lordship of Ravenstein, and lands to the value of 20,000 florins. The rest of the duchy, though partly mortgaged, produces ample rents. If freed from incumbrance, which could be easily done, it would yield 340,000 g. fl. 4. The eldest sister, Maria, is married to John Frederic, only son of John duke of Saxony, who, in wealth and power, has scarce an equal among the German princes. Allied with him are the principality of Hesse, the dukes of Pomerania, Mecklenburg, Lunenburg, Prussia, and Holsatia, who is now elected king of Denmark, with the Hans Towns of the Northern Ocean. The second sister is affianced (desponsata) to a son of Anthony duke of Lorraine, Calabria and Bari. He will be heir of these duchies and of the marquisates of Pontis Mosoni (Pont-à-Mouson), of the earldom of Vaidemont, and of the province of Narbonne. There is said to be an article in the marriage treaty, that on the death of the duke of Gueldres that duchy should devolve upon the aforesaid son of Lorraine, notwithstanding the opposition of the house of Burgundy. A third sister is in her minority, and not yet affianced. A table follows showing how a son of the duke of Cleves is sprung of royal and imperial blood, on the father's side and on the mother's, with some remarks on their genealogies.

3 May. 6365. [CROKE to GHINUCCI.]

Vit. B. XIII. 75 b. B. M.

Cannot write much, on account of his recent recovery from illness. Has received a catalogue of names which Ghinucci's nephew Andrew says his uncle received from Gregory de Cassalis. The names are partly those sent to Croke by Crucinus, and partly fictitious, which is probably a deceit either of Andrew or Cassalis. Received, the day after, from the Prothonotary, a list in his brother's hand, omitting many of the fictitious names. Asks him to send the names of those whom he has procured, and Croke will do the like by the first messenger, lest money should be wasted by engaging the same man twice. Wonders that he should have written to the Prothonotary to engage John Francis Marinus, whom Croke has already engaged, and wonders still more at his writing that Croke does not wish what he writes to him to be communicated to any one, especially as he desired Croke to communicate with the Cassalis. Has no orders to communicate with any one but Ghinucci. Thanks him for his servant Remigius. Has now found an Englishman who knows Italian well, and therefore sends back Remigius. Venice, 3 May.

4 May. 6366. SIR GREGORY CASALE to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has endeavored to bring over the most celebrated theologians to their views, to write in the King's behalf, and secured the following:—Mr. Chrysostom, inquisitor of St. Dominic, the minister of the Franciscan province of Bologna, Lorenzo, professor of theology in the same, and others of the Servites. The Emperor's confessor, lately created a cardinal, has given them great trouble, as the King will hear from Guron. Expects several lawyers will follow their example. Will stay at Bologna six days; thence to various places, to secure advocates for the King. Bologna, 4 May 1530. Signed.

4 May. 6367. HENRY VIII. to the VICE-CHANCELLOR OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

Lamb's Cambridge Docts., 26. Cooper's Annals of Cambridge, I. 342.

Desires him to appoint twelve of the best learned men in divinity in the university of Cambridge to meet a like number from the university of Oxford, at London, on Tuesday next at night, to examine certain English books commonly read among the people, containing erroneous and pestiferous words, sentences and conclusions, which might pervert their judgments, and occasion division and contention in the chief points and articles of our faith and religion, whereon is like to ensue, unless it be repressed, the dissolution of our commonwealth. Enfield, 4 May 1530, Wednesday.

"The names of them which I did appoint:—Dr. Watson, Dr. Wygan, Dr. Crome, Dr. Downes, Mr. Shaxton, Mr. Latymer, Mr. Thyxtell, Mr. Hutton, Mr. Tylson, Mr. Skyppes, Mr. Hethe, Mr. Bayne."

Lamb's Cambridge Documents, p. 20.

R. O. St. P. I. 361.

According to his request for the treasurership of York, has solicited the King and Dr. Leighton. They are content to leave it in your hands, provided you follow the tenor of the King's letters soon to be directed to you, and your Chancellor do the same without any delay. 7 May. 6369. CHARLES V. to MAY.

Add. MS. 28,580, f. 9. B. M.

Sends copies of letters from his ambassador in France touching the matter of the queen of England, and of letters written to him by a master in theology at Paris, called Garay. May will thus see what requires to be done for the Queen's rights. Has written to his ambassador to use all urgency with the French king to obtain the signatures which the said Garay writes that he had obtained in the Queen's favor; but you must remember that it will be a dangerous thing to agree with the opinion of the divines of the said faculty of Paris, considering the intrigues of the king of England, and the favor with which he is there regarded. You shall, therefore, tell his Holiness that we have heard from our ambassador that his nuncio in France is doing all he can in behalf of the Pope and the Emperor. So that his Holiness may write to the nuncio that he is informed thereof, and our ambassador will be able to act at more advantage. Innspruck, 7 May 1530.

P.S.— * * Since writing, the English ambassador has desired leave to return to Rome on the business of the divorce, saying that he has instructions to that effect. A gentleman who has come here to reside as his ambassador says that although his instructions are general to go to Rome on the said business, nevertheless he believes it will be to proceed in the cause, and that the bishop of London also returned from Lyons to Rome to see to it. You must consult with the Queen's council what is to be done about this, and not regard what the English ambassador tells you. No more time must be lost, for the month's respite which was lately taken is already past. The ambassador says he will go with his household to Trent, and there take post for Rome.

If the Church bids him, will disprove these conclusions by the authority of Scripture, not by that of learned men; as he did in writing against the Lutherans. Saw these writings on 4 May 1530. Wrote this on the 8th, at the desire of Jerome Scledeo, bishop of Vaison, nuncio with the Emperor. Signed: Frater Anselmus Vochturinus, Augustinianus, Vicentinus.

Vit. B. XIII. 76. B. M.

Has endured much from Remigius, but has dissembled "ne . . . . . indicare tibi."

An Englishman, well skilled in Italian, came to him, and he therefore dismissed Remigius, knowing that he had often betrayed secrets, and spoken against Croke. Hopes he has not told untruths to Ghinucci. Gave him as reward for his labor about 7 cr., which he refused, saying that giving him money was an insult to his master. Before going, he complained to Antony that Croke had scarcely given him enough to go to Rome, and had treated him like a dog. When Croke was absent or ill, the same table was prepared for him as for Croke. He called Croke comrade, and treated him more like a master. He persuaded Antony to write and tell him whatever Croke did, said or attempted, saying that it would please Ghinucci. He took letters for Ghinucci to the house of Horatio, and warned Antony not to write in Croke's house. For all this he showed Croke his master's letters, charging him to attend to him diligently. Did not wish to mention his conduct, for fear of injuring him. Now that he is neither faithful to Ghinucci nor Croke, thought it best not to keep silence. He has boasted of his conduct to a man whom he considered true to him. He has treated Croke insultingly before others, and called him a fool. Doubts not that he has been the cause of Ghinucci's suspicion. Venice, 9 [May].*

6377. W. TRESHAM to WOLSEY.

Desires God to prosper the Cardinal "to his high pleasure and your consolation." Delivered my book to the King at the More on 29 April. At the delivery I said I had a brief proposition in Latin, beseeching him to be gracious to the college; first, because it was begun by himself as chief benefactor; secondly, that the foundation was greatly to the honor of God and the good of the realm; thirdly, that the college was bound by oath to pray for him, with special dirges every week. I told him how you had ordered Mr. Champion, as soon as the matter came to your knowledge. He replied, "'Ee Mary! I warrant you, let my Lord alone with them; he will handle them well enough.' And when I said that your Grace had not utterly expelled the man, but that he should make special suit to his Highness, other else never to perceive any emolument of that college, and so by and by to be as a person expelled; very mercifully be answered, 'In case the man would reconcile himself effectuously, I would not have him utterly cast away.' Further, his Grace was very well pleased with the good letters the which your Grace sent to Oxford, touching the election of the proctors, rehearsing that ye sent him the copy of your letters; and was very glad of the amplitude of your freely granted power and authority upon the university." Fox was present.

Was sent up before my fellows, Mr. Sub-Dean and Mr. Leyghton, to speed a matter of Dr. Nicholas. He had begged of the King "whitze copies (copes) for the high days of Our Lady." The King said, "Alack! they are all disposed, and not one of them is left." On the King wishing me to wait till the coming of my fellows, Fox advised me not to make any more labour for the college unless I was sure of the King's pleasure; saying that the King's college of Cambridge lost a good part of their lands at the beginning, and yet is a very honorable college; and that, peradventure, in time to come, "the King would call your Grace near unto him." Mr. Sub-Dean and Mr. Leyghton arrived on the 5th. From want of friends we passed the time in attendance till the 11th, when Fox called in Leyghton only to exhibit his book to the King, adding that if we would make suit for the college, it would be best to get a proxy under the seal, and do everything by authority.

On delivering his book with letters supplicatory for the college, Mr. Leyghton besought the King to be gracious for Daventry and Caxby. He answered, that his Council showed him that none of our lands were assured to the college except by his suffrance; and when Leyghton alleged we were his faithful subjects, he said that divers of our house had opposed his matters at Oxford, only a few taking his part, and asked for Mr. Sub-Dean and myself. He then said we had better send for a proxy. What that means we cannot tell, unless that we should release some part of our college lands, which God forbid we should, except your Grace desire it. We shall send for no proxy till we hear from you.

There is a saying that the King will take in three lordships near Hunsdon, and recompense the owners partly with Ipswich and partly with our college lands. The Chancellor of the Duchy told us that the King intends to dispose of the spiritualties of Daventry in 14 days. We advise that a fee should be given to the Chancellor out of the revenues, to help us to conserve the same, or else that you should write to him. We three and nine others are appointed by the university to examine new heretical books, and decide whether it is necessary to have the Bible in English; so that we cannot so well attend to the college business. 6378. Rodrigo Niño to Charles V.

Will gladly comply with the Emperor's instructions about the affair of the queen of England. Henry could not have behaved worse toward the Emperor in his conduct toward the Signory. I am assured that no opinion will be given in the university of Padua by the authority of the Signory. Seeing that this was decided, the English ambassador here has gone to Padua to take the private opinions of the principal doctors. On being informed of this, I spoke to the Vice-Doge (Viso Duque) in presence of the college, reminding them of the relation made by the prothonotary (Caracciolo) and myself of the justice of the Queen's cause, and advising them as their servant, and not as the Emperor's ambassador (for I had no commission on the subject), to send to the professors of the university, forbidding them to give any opinion in the matter without orders from the Signory.

This advice was accepted thankfully, and I was assured it should be followed.

The Emperor thinks the bishop of Quieta (Chieti) will do well to leave his retirement and go to England to exhort the King to desist from his error. Has strongly urged this course upon him, pointing out the arguments he might use from the example of kings who have ruined themselves and their kingdoms by less occasion, especially in England, and that he was more bound than any man in Christendom to take upon him this task, as he knew the Queen personally, and knew how little she merited such treatment;—moreover the King had sought his counsel about the matter, and it would be more acceptable to God to do what he could in this cause, than to remain in religious seclusion. Has learned that the English have used great efforts in Venice to procure opinions in their favor. Has written to Rodrigo Niño for information. A courier arrived from England yesterday. I have sent your Majesty the substance of what the Queen and the ambassador have written me. Will endeavor to procure this brief which they ask for, that no one shall give counsel or speak in this article, except only what he thinks to be truth and justice, under grave censures.

Now that we know the difficulties, "que de alli mueven," I will draw up the case so that your Majesty may send to have opinions from your own kingdoms, where there are hosts of lawyers, as good or better than the English. Excuses his not having done it at Bologna, because, as he told the Comendador Major and Granvelle, he was waiting to learn the difficulties that the opposite party would make in the case, so as to meet the doubts which they expressed. Copies of these doubts may be sent into Castile, Arragon, Sicily, and Majorca, where there are many lawyers, and to Naples. Rome, 12 May 1530.

13 May. 6383. REGINALD POLE to HENRY VIII.

R. O. After having sealed his other letters to the King, was informed by Langeais of the arrival of a post with such letters from the French king to the university "as Mr. Welsborne, your Grace's orator, had written to be sent by the last post" from the French court. His doubts about their non-appearance are thus satisfied. Langeais says they are as effectually writ as could be for the King's purpose. The only delay now is owing to the absence of some doctors "chief of your Grace's parte," who are expected to return in five days. After their arrival, will inform the King of the speed made in publishing his cause. Paris, 13 May.

14 May. 6385. NIX BISHOP OF NORWICH to [NORFOLK ?]

Cleop. E. v. 360*. B. M. Is encumbered with those who read and keep these erroneous books in English, and believe and teach them. Has done what he could to suppress them; but it passes his power, or that of any spiritual man. Many in his diocese say openly that the King favors such books. Asked the abbot of Hide to show this to the King, and to ask him for letters ordering some one in the diocese to publish that he does not wish such books to be read, and also to punish those that say he does. Hopes the Abbot will have done so before this letter comes to hand. The Abbot has the names of some who crack in the King's name that their false opinions should go forth, and would die in the quarrel that they are true; they trust that before Michaelmas day more people will believe their opinions than the contrary. Would have told the Abbot to speak to your Grace, if I had known you had been at London, but you can send for him when you please. He will show what the Bishop thinks about the suppression of these opinions, which, if they continue, "shall undo us all." The Abbot left him on Monday last. Has had much trouble since then. They say that, wherever they go, they hear that the King's pleasure is that the New Testament in English should go forth. Cannot induce them to give up this opinion, without greater power to punish them. Asks him to speak to the King.

The gentlemen and commonalty in his diocese are not greatly infected, but only the merchants and those who live near the sea.

The Abbot will tell him of a well-learned curate who exhorted his hearers to believe contrary to the Catholic faith. There is a college at Cambridge, called Gunwell Haule, founded by a bishop of Norwich. Hears of no clerk who has lately come out of it but savoureth of the frying pan, though he speak never so holily. Hoxne, 14 May 1530. Signed.

R. O. Has received his letter in the King's name about the brief, of which no mention had been made, either to the Emperor or the Pope, when the earl of Wiltshire arrived. Was, however, prepared to oppose the brief, if it had been produced. His duty seemed to be silence, until he was called upon to answer. Spoke about the brief to the Pope, who said he had never seen it, knew not where it was, and did not believe it could be with the Imperial ambassador. Is very thankful to the King for using his influence for his promotion to the cardinalate. Has hopes of success. The Emperor urges the Pope to promote a person named by him, and the bishop of Tarbes says that the French king has written in his favor.

Supposes, therefore, that the king of England will not be refused. Does not doubt of the favor of the Cardinals, except a few of the juniors, though these matters are done now by the Pope alone. Wishes the King would write to the bishop of London and Benett to speak to the Pope in behalf of him and the prothonotary Casale, with the preference for himself if only one can be elected.

15 May. 6388. CRUCINUS to [GEORGIUS].

R. O. Records of the Reformation, i. 311.

Has received his letters of 27 April. Asks what has been written to the King about him. Supposes he has received the money which Crucinus voluntarily remitted. Croke should not come here on Crucinus' account; Georgius is most intimately acquainted with his sentiments. If, however, he wishes to come on account of any others, he can do as he pleases. Has not seen and cannot find his letters of which Georgius wrote. Apologises for not sending the answer to certain clauses which Georgius wants. "Quamdiu . . . uit in targlio, impius est contra me, obmutui, cessavi et tacui a verbis [bonis]." Has always advised him, if the truth is really sought for, to send . . . . and a list of reasons in writing, with the names changed. Hopes it will not be considered his fault if the nature of the cause becomes known to some by the coming of these men to Milan. Sir Gregory Casale is not to blame, for matters often come to knowledge without any fault of the agent, as is the case now. Will not spare writing, if of any use. Asks him to inform the legate Casale at Venice, and his brother Sir Gregory. Milan, 15 May 1530.

16 May. 6389. JOHN WELLYSBURN to HENRY VIII.

Add. MS. 5,114, f. 32. B. M.

The Great Master has sent word that the place has been appointed where the children shall be delivered. Trusts the King will then remove. Many have fallen sick, as well as himself, and the people are dying of hunger. Cannot hear what is done, or what is intended. There is much counselling daily, as he has written already. Much secresy is observed. Gervaise has written from Angiere to Mons. de Bayone, and has left for Paris, with their determination for the King's part, as Bayone told him yesterday. Bayonne had been sent by the King to offer him his physician. Had been sick for eight days; but now, through the comfort of my lord of Wiltshire and the diligence of his physician, is greatly recovered. Angolesme, 16 May.

17 May. 6390. LAURENCE [STUBBS] to WOLSEY.

Tit. B. i. 322. B. M.

Has received his letters, dated 11 May, saying that he marvels Stubbs should "degrese" from the promise he made at Kingston. Would have performed it, if he had got in his debts; but his inability to do so, and other charges, have caused him to sell land worth 7*l.* a year, which he had purchased for an intent which he thought would please God. His benefices are of small value, and his expences great. Asks Wolsey to have patience with him. Touching the detinue from Wolsey of any part of the 1,000*l.* which the King gave him to pay his debts, which sum Wolsey writes was given only for payment of creditors of the household, was ordered by the Council, after paying these creditors, to use the rest for paying persons who made exclamation for lack of payment for buildings; and he accordingly paid the painter, the smith, Clement Armaston, the glazier, and others at daily wages, who were unpaid for work at Esher and York Place. Was unable to pay James Nedam in full, but the King examined him as to whether he had spent the whole 1,000*l.*, and, finding that it was so, paid Nedam the remainder of his debt. No payment was made to him or any other for buildings at York Place, Esher, Tittenhanger, or More, till the King was certified that the 1,000*l.* was fully paid. If Wolsey wishes for more information, will labor for letters from the King or the Council to certify him thereof. Wolsey has had the benefit of 100 mks. which Stubbs gave to Thomas Rawlings, part of the said 1,000*l.* Would recover more, if he could do it justly, and would pay it twice, if he could, rather than discontent Wolsey's mind; but he hopes Wolsey, knowing the truth and his inability, will not desire it. The "lokes" (books?) which he promised Wolsey are ready, and he will deliver them to Cromwell.

The president of Magdalen College has paid no part of the 40*l.* which Wolsey assigned for the redemption of the pension of 20*l.* due to Stubbs. Asks for a testimonial of the assignment of the said pension, and of the President's agreement thereto. Hopes that although he has lost that worshipful promotion, he will not lose the pension. Is much called upon, aud actions are taken against him for Mr. Tony's and Dr. Haniball's matters. Westm., 17 May.

The Signory have informed him, that, agreeably to his advice, they have sent orders to the professors at Padua to give no opinion on the behalf either of the King or Queen, as they did not wish those who were in their pay to meddle with a matter so dangerous to the authority of the Holy See, especially to the prejudice of a person related to the Emperor. It might also prejudice the king of Portugal, who had a dispensation in the same degree. The rewards offered to them by the king of England would be a great offence to the Holy See. Of six professors, five answered that they would obey the command of the Signory, notwithstanding that they had been spoken to by the agents of the king of England and offered great rewards, and they would get out of the business with the best grace they could. But Micer Marian de Sena excuses himself, saying that though he is professor, he is not bound on that account to abstain from giving advice to those who pay him; that he did so six months ago, and that he cannot but persist in it. They asked me what I thought should be done with such an obstinate man. I said I thought they should write to him how ill he had behaved in not giving them notice as soon as the affair came to his knowledge, and that he ought not to have given advice without consulting them on a matter which concerns such great princes; but now that he is resolved to continue, they should send to desire the opinions of all the doctors, both those in favor of the King and those on the opposite side. This they promised to do. I then told them that the agents of the king of England intended to ask them for the opinion of the college of doctors in this city, and that the bishop of London and other ambassadors were coming to see to it. I advised them to think of the answer they would give, "porque sin duda se lo pediran sino los mudasse desta opinion descubrirse el mandamiento que sus señorias a los dottores de Padua han hecho por donde havran conoscido que no daran sus señorias lugar a esta junto pues no le dan para que los dottores den su conseio en ello." They all thanked me much for this advice, and this city disapproves so much of the conduct of the king of England that they will not permit any consultation to be held to the Queen's prejudice.

The English ambassadors have again pressed the bishop of Quieta (Chieti) for his opinion, showing him letters of his friends, in which they request him to give it. He has answered with moderation that he desires always to speak in it in such a manner as to do great service to the Queen. I, however, pressed him to go to England, and meanwhile not to declare himself; but he is unable to dissemble so much; and now they request of him, that, since he will not give an opinion in the King's favor, he will not do so in the Queen's either. This they desired of him on the 13th. They are also trying to procure the opinion of another Franciscan, named Francisco de la Vina, of this city, who is now 20 miles hence. Has mentioned this to the bishop of Chieti, who has secretly advised the friar to excuse himself. Has not spoken about this friar, or of individual lawyers, to the Signory, as they might reply that they are not their paid officers.

Before the Signory told me what they had done about this matter, I knew that the English agents complained that the doctors of Padua had taken their money and excused themselves from giving their opinion. I find they say that they will convoke in Bologna this meeting of their doctors which they wished to have here.

The bishop of Chieti left on the 15th for Padua, to await the commands of his Holiness and the Signory about a heretic friar who preached there in Holy Week. * * * Venice, 17 May 1530.

18 May. 6393. The EARL OF WILTSHIRE to HENRY VIII.

R. O. St. P. VII. 235.

Wrote on the 13th by Alexander. On Saturday the bishop of Bayonne told me of his master's extreme charges, as the Emperor had urged the Swiss to demand their money; that as the Emperor is now in Almain he has been obliged to pay the Princes what is their due, lest they should join the former; and he begs you, therefore, to respite his payment now due. I replied that I was surprised at this request, for the King had received from his realm twice as much as was necessary for the ransom of his children. I told him that you had a prior claim to all others, and begged him never to urge his request, as I would never support it. After many warm words he said he was sure his master could not pay; and I bade him beware of giving his master any such advice. I have since heard no more about it. If the same request is moved to you by the French ambassador in England do not consent to it.

I perceive they expect to have their children on the 25th, or at the beginning of next month. I cannot hear any news touching the Queen, or what the determination of Francis may be. If he resolves on any enterprize, he will let you know by De Vaulx, the ambassador. I have told the latter of your letter for his advancement to the cardinalate. The King and my Lady will help what they can in your great matter, and speak of you with great affection. I received your letter about the salt by Wellysborn. Am lodged here in the court, and feasted daily. Angoulesme, 18 May.

6398. GHINUCCI to [CROKE].

Received his letters of the 3rd by Remigius, who returned yesterday. Is glad he has recovered his health. Is sure his nephew, Andrea, has done nothing to betray the cause. Thinks he must have given Croke the same catalogue Ghinucci gave him, which Ghinucci received from Sir Gregory. As he was not at Milan with Crucinus, cannot tell about the names. They may be partly those sent by Crucinus and partly feigned, as Croke writes. That a different list may have been communicated by the Prothonotary is a matter he is not called on to explain. Does not know one of the persons named. Cannot send the names of those he has procured (quos paravimus) at present, as Sir Gregory has them, whom he left to see to the matter when he came to Rome; but Sir Gregory will be here in three or four days. Knows that when he left Bologna, Hieronimo de Lucca, general of the Order of Servites, was being treated with; also that Crisostomus de Casali, of the Order of Preachers at Piacenza, had written on the King's side. Has no other names to send. Has sent to several places, and especially to the place Croke advised. Has letters signifying that they have hired some persons, but they mention no names. From other quarters he has received no answers. Has tried many persons here, but to no purpose. Marcus Raphael is here, and Ghinucci invited him to his house, but he declined all offers. He told my brother that Francesco was going to the Pope, which I could not believe, as you did not mention it. Croke wonders at Ghinucci writing to the Prothonotary about Gisi Francesco Mari. Is no less surprised himself, for he neither wrote nor thought nor heard about him. Was instructed by the King to treat in common with Sir Gregory, and neither was to do anything without the other's knowing. Croke was welcome to the services of Remigius, but, as he declines to keep him longer, Ghinucci is glad to have him back. Both he and all that Ghinucci possesses are at Croke's service, to whom he has been devoted since the first day he knew him. Will write to him as often as he can find messengers. Expects the bishop of London and Bennet shortly. Rome, 21 May 1530.

The Prothonotary has written to him that he is in want of money both for the doctors at Padua and for the divines. Wishes Croke to tell him what to do. I mention this on account of the divines, because you said that all who could be had in those parts had been already hired by you.

Add. MS. 28,580, f. 53. B. M.

Has written to him several times what has been done here in the faculty of theology about the queen of England's matter. As your Majesty and Madame Margaret have urged me to do all I could in the matter, I may inform you how they annulled the signatures (como me quitaron las firmas) which I had obtained in the Queen's favor. Until now I have not been able to recover them, with all the efforts used by your ambassadors. The other side have gained, by money, threats, and importunity, with the favor in which they are held, thirty-five signatures or more; among which are four or five even of those who had signed for the Queen. Fears they will gain a vote in the name of the whole faculty for the king of England. Thinks a brief from the Pope should be obtained to annul all that has been done. This could be obtained the more easily, as it is said he has already at the Emperor's instance enjoined the King to live with his wife under pain of excommunication. But delay will entail danger. If I obtain it in time, I promise your Majesty more than 60 signatures, or the conclusion of the faculty sealed, before the play begins; but a single Spaniard is powerless, if he can only use the name of your Majesty. 25 May. 6403. [CROKE to HENRY VIII.]
Vit. B. XIII. 85. B. M.

Has found no learned or pious man who does not favor the King's cause. Besides the names already sent, Thomas Omnibonus has gained seven more subscriptions to conclusions in favor of the cause, and Simonetus has promised 20. Gives these letters to the bishop of London on account of the danger of the journey. Sends a copy of letters which were sent to him open, in case the King wishes to answer. Was at Vicenza, on May 5, with father Francis, who in his presence caused nine doctors to sign conclusions, the paper containing also other signatures of Observants. Soon after Croke's departure, the bishop of Vaison, master of the Pope's household and nuncio here, who was staying with the ambassador at his country house, came to Vicenza, obtained possession of the signatures by threatening father Francis and a few others, and asked the podesta whether it had been done by order of the Senate, as father Francis would be in no little danger. Said to the nuncio today, May 13, that he was glad that the Pope so feared the justice of the King's cause that he tried secretly to put it down by force; and related the King's merits towards the Pope and the Apostolic See. He denied that he had done this with the Pope's order, or that he knew anything of the King's cause. Knows that he scarcely speaks the truth in this. He promised, however, to interfere no more. He went yesterday to Padua, and goes tomorrow to Venice. If he intends to frighten the King's friends there, it must be that John Cassale has advised him to do it, from envy. Croke and Leonicus have seen his letters to Simonetus, praying him to write to the bishop of London that the King's affairs here are badly managed and published abroad, as the ambassador Cassale could testify. Simonetus also complained that he prevented him from obtaining the right number of masters of theology. He says that Cassale gave the King's conclusions to friar Berges, an ignorant and uninfluential man, to be discussed in the King's name at the meeting of friars at Rovigo; that Cassale asked him to write to the bishop of London that nothing had been done in the King's cause before he interceded with Simonetus; and when Simonetus refused, asked him to write that matters had been badly managed, and never finished

* On the 25th May, according to Hall, the King came into the Star Chamber, and, after a conference with the Bishops and other members of the Council touching the inaccuracy of Tyndale's translations, commanded the Bishops to prepare a new translation with the help of the most learned men in the universities, "so that the people should not be ignorant in the law of God." But, according to the chronicler, the Bishops did nothing, so that people studied Tyndale's translation the more.

without him. Has never dealt with any man but Cassale afterwards tried by flattery and threats to induce him to draw them off. Gaspar Contarini, Lewis Monsinigno, and Peter Bembo, who are Imperialists, attempt to influence the Friars. The ambassador is so familiar with Gaspar that he exhorted Croke to apply to him about obtaining an answer, and said more than once that he was treating with him privately about it. Has not hitherto been able to get an answer, since they replied that they would give one which would gratify the King. "Dicit tamen mihi orator tuus co . . . . . se habere illos nihil responsuros et me propter causas quas proxime scrip[si] . . . . hortatus est ne responsum exigerem. Audio tamen hærere sena[tum] . . . . quod velint ut exhiberem literas ad me tuas. Sends the names sent to him by the bishop of Worcester. Those marked with one dot are what Crucinus sent, and those marked with two are clearly fictitious. Knows that several friars, who have neither name, learning, nor influence, have signed at their request. On the Padua boat, late at night, 25 May.

Sends also letters of Nicolas Leonicus, showing how much the King owes to him, who not only tries to gain the King friends, but to exhort the most learned theologians to support his cause. He encouraged Francis Marino, when he was in great fear. It is dangerous to do anything without the permission of the Pope and the Senate. Nothing must be disclosed to the Venetian ambassador in England, for he will inform the Senate. Whatever is entrusted to these adherents of the Pope is to the injury of the cause. They use secret means to hinder, though they dare not do so openly, and have promised assistance. Asks him to enquire about Leonicus' good qualities, of the bishop of Durham, Pole, and William Latimer, who, with Linacre, were his pupils. Requests that his letters may be read only by Tuke and Fox.

Wrote on the 17th all that was done about the queen of England. The bishop of Vaison, the Pope's major domo, has come to Vicenza, his native place; and, finding what the agents of the king of England were doing, urged the doctors not to yield, as it would be to the injury of Christendom. He dissuaded some, and one of them gave him the conclusions which the king of England wished them to maintain, and a copy of the arguments of those who have written in his favor. Sends the whole to the Emperor. He also got a friend of his to write against the King an opinion, which he would not show to me till the Pope had seen it. I told him what

Vit.B.XIII.79. B. M.

The King's matters here go lustily forward, notwithstanding the frauds and lets of which he has written to the King, with proofs to show that he does not write merely upon suspicion or report. Has, by witness and letters, proved some things before the bishop of London, which Fox would not believe. Has procured writings and subscriptions from 36 doctors and 14 friars Observants, of good learning and estimation; and he doubts not that he will send 50 more shortly, in spite of the evil chance that happened to father Francis at Vincence. Sends a conclusion and subscriptions given him by Simo[netus], "the which, because Simonetus hath, as he saith, till licenc[e] be obtained that he and they may speak at liberty, changy[d from] posse into debere, till I have that changed again I wol not ascertain the King of it." Will serve his Prince truly and earnestly, without "acception" or fear of any man. Wishes him to report thus to the King. Desires to be commended to his most dear lord and master, my lord of Richmond, and asks Fox to tell him that he hopes to bring him home Cæsar's bridges, and a copy of a galley with five oars, such as few men have seen. Asks him to tell the King that tha[nswer] to his letters shall be as his ambassadors say, that the Senate will bid Croke do his best, and will not interrupt him. If the matter should be anything advanced by them, the Prince must summon the heads of every religion, and bid them tell their fellows that if any man demands their opinions in a question of matrimony concerning the king of England or the Emperor, the Senate is content that every man should say and write their minds according to their learning and conscience. 26 May. 6407. [CROKE to HENRY VIII.]

Vit.B.XIII.77. B. M.

In his pr[esence] at Vincentia, father Francis caused nine doctors to subscribe a bill drawn up by him in corroboration of the King's cause, and many others also signed it. When Croke left, the bishop of Vaison, the nuncio apostolic here, took it from Francis and burnt it. Does not know at whose suggestion, but he came from his place in the country to Vincentia, as he told Croke himself, purposely to do this, and De Cassalis was staying with him. Notwithstanding this loss, with those that the King already has, and those in Croke's and Francis' hands, they have 50 subscriptions and counsels,—36 by doctors, and the rest by Observants of learning and estimation. The King will also have more from Verona and Foro Julio, beside what Francis Marinus, provincial of the Grey Friars, has promised, by the exhortation of Leonicus. Simonetus, whose letter to the King Croke has given to the bishop of London, complained sorely to Croke and Leonicus that the ambassador had committed the King's conclusion to a friar named Bergs, to be published and disputed in the King's name at their general chapter at Rhoigo; which publication has prevented him procuring subscriptions. He tried by craft to ascribe this error to Croke, and wrote to ask Simonetus to tell the bishop of London that the King's matters had been evil handled and disclosed to every man. Simonetus showed this letter to Croke and . . . . . "But the cause of all this malice is the sight of [such letters] as your Grace sent unto me and . . . . . whereof the * * * to me he dissolved and delivered father Francis the copy of your most honorable letters sent unto him, or that he delivered me the same;" although Croke was at home, and accompanied him to father Francis' chamber and back. His answer to Croke's daily request to give the King's letters to the Senate will be shown by the enclosed bill in his own hand. No doubt it is through him that Croke can get no answer from the Senate, and never will have, as he says. He knows Croke has no credence nor authority to demand answer, except the King's letter, which he cannot show. He lessens Croke's estimation all that he can, saying that he is sent to solicit him. However, by the help of Dominic of Treviso, got into the senate house one day, in the ambassador's absence, and obtained a promise that they would send for him in two or three days, and give him such an answer as would please the King. Has solicited very diligently since then, but can obtain neither hearing nor answer. Asks the King to grant him a commission, that he may obtain credence and authority by showing it, and to send him new instructions and money for his diets beforehand, and for the expences of his mission. Has nothing of his own, neither by friends nor by promotion. Has been here seven months, and has not received diets for a day longer. Has also laid out . . . . . [as] appears by the enclosed accounts. Doubts not shortly to send proof of his fidelity and diligence * * * Cannot conceal from the King that he received from the prothonotary a bill of names s[ent] by Sir Gregory, for the retaining of whom in Milan he demands 50 cr., as appears by his and Ghinucci's letters. Sends a copy of the bill, and of a notarial instrument sent to father Francis by Crucinus, stating how he had spent the money sent him by Francis and Croke. This instrument plainly shows that Sir Gregory demands money for retaining men already retained. The bill sent by the bishop of Worcester also contains some of the same names, and the names pricked are fictitious, as are some of the names shown by the Bishop to the bishop of London. If the King has not received Thomas Omnibonus' conclusion in his own hand, it must have been sent to the Pope, for Ghinucci did not show it to the bishop of London, and his brother Paul lately threatened the friar to send it to his Holiness. This will greatly hinder the King's cause and undo the friar, unless the King succours him. Asks the King to consider with what men his ambassadors and poor servants have to meddle, in case they do not proceed as well with his causes as they would and should. Asks him to direct Tuke to inform Croke immediately what letters and writings his Highness receives, for he has sent "V . . . . . and except one in English, I sent with them divers lett[ers and] writings concerning your most [high causes] * * * [c]aused my servant to copy them out, and upon their backsides to write what letters and writings I sent with each of them." Asks that his letters may be read by Tuke and Fox, and kept from the knowledge of the Venetian ambassador and all other Italians, for fear of their sending secret information hither, which would put him in great danger. 6408. MAI to CHARLES V.

* * * *

The Pope has promised me that he will send a brief to the king of France, or at least to his nuncio, to use every effort to prevent the doctors of Paris from meeting, saying that it is to the prejudice of the Holy See to dispute its power merely at the instance of the English. Has obtained the brief which the Queen desired, that no one, on pain of the greater excommunication, shall judge, allege, or counsel otherwise than his conscience dictates. Sends a copy. Has caused one to be sent to the Queen, which will be published in the churches, and, if necessary, in Flanders. Hears that in Venice they have decided for the English. Rodrigo Niño writes how he has dissuaded them from meeting in Padua. Has spoken to the Pope to prevent their doing so at Bologna. He says the Governor has already dissuaded them, and that he will write further to forbid it. Will write to Lope de Soria to counteract their devices at Sienna. The Pope has received a letter from the bishop of Vaison at Venice, who says that he had been shown by a friar an opinion they had signed against the Queen, or rather against the Pope, and that he had strongly counselled them not to deliver it. His advice was so far followed that they not only would not give it to the English, but they gave it to him, and he tore it up. The Pope is much delighted with this, although, as to John Matthew, "sta algo entresi," and his Holiness wishes me to understand that it is not likely to be true (que no debe de ser verdad).

His Holiness told me that the bishop of London and Dr. Benet are coming as ambassadors, and that they have written to him that on their arrival his Holiness would understand the good mind of their King.

The Pope believes readily what he wishes. He tells me he has news from England that they are making marriages there between divers persons of whom his Holiness has no knowledge, but that "el Boular" (Sir Thos. Boleyn) appeared to have lost his hopes in this matter, and that the King for this cause had given Mrs. Anne certain goods for her support. Does not believe this.

Has received a message from cardinal Egidius, saying that he wishes much to study this case. Thinks it might be an advantage, but wishes to know what to answer. The absence of the cardinal of Ancona is a great loss. He is at Ancona, and says he will not return till September. Cardinal Cajetan is favorable. Rome, 26 May 1530.

ii. Summary of the letters of Rodrigo Niño from Venice, of the 4th, 13th, and 17th May.

That, understanding the king of England was endeavoring to obtain an opinion from the university of Padua, he and the Prothonotary had spoken to the Doge as of themselves, and the ambassador has obtained a promise from the Signory accordingly, as both the thing itself and the manner of procedure appear to them diabolical.

Afterwards, when the Englishman came from Padua, he learned how he had treated with one friar Simonetta, a bad man; and that he was intending to go and treat with another friar, Francisco de Lavina, who was twenty miles from thence; but he prevented him. Nevertheless, they have arranged that the doctors of Venice should vote, although the Venetians are ill disposed in the matter. Also they have made application to the bishop of Chieti with letters from their King, and as he did not give a favorable answer they have produced letters from the bishop of Verona, and since they are not allowed to meet there they intend to have a meeting at Bologna. The Signory have taken good measures to prevent those of Padua voting; for of six professors, only one, named Mariano de Sena, has remained (quedado). It is six months since he gave his opinion, and wished to proceed in it. Now they will not have a meeting unless they have an eye to Bologna. The bishop of Chieti has left for Padua to punish an heretical friar.

6411. JAMES CLYFFE, Priest, to BONER.

Is glad to hear of his good health. It has pleased the King's grace to assemble a congregation, to be kept at Westminster, with certain bishops and twelve doctors of both universities. A commission is to be sent to every bishop to inquire for all English books which are condemned, and bring them in by a certain day. All persons retaining them eight days after such notice to be reputed heretics. "Other matters have been communed of, but, God be thanked, as yet they take little effect. There is much communing of divers marriages betwixt the duke of Norfolk and my lady Princess, and the young Duke and my Lord aforesaid, but there is no conclusion made in that behalf, as far as I can hear." Young Barley is lately come from beyond sea, and reports a marriage betwixt a cousin of the Emperor and the French king; the French king's sons to be delivered on the last Ascension Day, as he reports. My lord of Wiltshire is in the French king's court. His friends are uncertain of his coming home. Mr. Leye is come home, but has not brought such news as were desired. My lord Cardinal is communed of, and among lords of the Council specially. The[y] fear that the[y] shall of necessity be compelled to call for my lord Cardinal's grace again. God continue their minds in that behalf. "Mr. Latimer keeps his old opinions, and divers other, which were too long to ascribe their names." The King and the Queen are this day at Hampton Court, and my lady Anne. "My Lord of the Vale Royal is in his possession again, with the King's favor and letters, and some of his brethren in the Castle of Chester,—not all at their pleasure, no thanks to Mr. Lee. In like manner, the abbot of Chester, sometime named Condam, I trust, shall be in his house." London, 29 May.

R. O. In addition to the number mentioned in his last letters, has obtained the signatures of 18 doctors to the assertion of the conclusion, which he encloses with their names. Sends also extracts from the bishop of Worcester's letters, showing the advice received from him at different times in the King's name. Has not followed it altogether, for fear of rumor. Has treated of the King's causes only with father Franciscus Georgius, Joannes Franciscus Marinus, Thomas Omnibonus, and Simon Ardeus, otherwise called Simonetus, whose letters to the King he gave to the bishop of London on 15 May. Has been present, though unknown, when many doctors signed, and saw that only fear of the Pope prevented many from speaking and writing according to their learning and conscience. Doubted the Pope's granting open licence to speak freely, from his fear of the Emperor; and therefore asked the bishop of London to cause Ghinucci to tell the friars that the Pope wished every man to write and speak freely, if any question was put to them concerning matrimony in the behalf of the king of England, and that he should write that he had spoken with the Pope and perfectly knew his mind. If he did this, and leave was obtained from the Senate, would have no doubt of obtaining most of Italy, for the auditor Cameræ Apostolicæ is held in high estimation. Padua, 30 May.

Articles made for the King's cause by Michael Zodo. 1. Whether it is certain about the dispensation under lead, considering the contrary assertion of the Pope. 2. Supposing that the dispensation under lead is lawful, whether the brief of the same date is so too, considering the suspicions. 3. Whether the cause of peace, stated in the dispensation, is sufficient, as there was no war or controversy between the King and Duke. 4. If the cause of peace mentioned in the bull is not sufficient, whether the expression about it in the bull makes it valid. 5. If not, whether the expression et aliis causis animum nostrum moventibus, gives a sufficient cause. 6. Whether the protestation caused the consent of Olimbrandus to cease, or whether it should not be received, as dishonorable. 7. Whether the minority of Olimbrandus, which was not told to the Pope, invalidates the dispensation. 8. Whether, if the dispensation was invalid, the connexion between the parties when of full age gave it validity.

Item, the doctors of canon law should argue that the prohibition is of divine law, and that the persons engaged for the King should be questioned as to the falseness of the brief and other points.

R. O.

In answer to yours of the 30 May, being about to start in a day or two, I shall make you answer by mouth. I will only say that if his Holiness is dissatisfied, "che si havessino a rivedere q^te^ cose da tanti secoli determinare," he ought not to have committed the cause into England; and if he is further displeased at their taking such counsels here, he ought not to revoke the cause to Rome, having done which, it will be great impiety (impietà) to forbid the King to consult doctors and advocates. But I would not like your Lordship to talk of this with any other than myself.

6420. J. RUSSELL to CROMWELL.

The King has granted the Lord Chamberlain 100 marks yearly out of the lordship of Fernham, as keeper of the castle, and he desires Cromwell to make him out a patent, and to send him a form of a letter how the King should write to Wolsey for his consent, and for his sign and seal; and to tell him whether Wolsey or the chancellor of Winchester has the seal. Sends a letter to be forwarded to Wolsey, not that there is much in it, but he does not wish Wolsey to think he has forgotten him. After you left the King, "his Grace had very good communication of you." Hampton Court, 1 June. Signed.

6421. JO. PIETRO BISHOP OF CHIETI to CHARLES V.

Has received his letter of the 22nd ult. by Rodrigo Nigno. Is glad his services in the matter of the queen of England have given satisfaction. Has done what he did for the service of God and for the Holy See, but knew that it would be also for the service of the Emperor. As he has already notified to the Pope the request made to him on the part of the king of England, does not see what else he can do in the matter, without instructions from the Emperor. 6422. RODRIGO NIÑO to [CHARLES V.]

Received on the 27th ult. the Emperor's letters of the 22nd, with others for the Doge and the bishop of Chieti. Has since expressed to the Signory, the Emperor's thanks for what they have done in the matter of the queen of England, saying that they had acted like Christians and Catholics, and requesting them to persevere. The Doge replied that they had seen with what good will they had made answer to the prothonotary Caracciolo, and to me, when we spoke about it, and that long before we arrived they had been requested to do something on behalf of the king of England; that I had also seen how persistent the English ambassador had been with them that day. On which they had great discussions, [the ambassador] expressing great regret for what they had done about the doctors of Padua, and urging them to comply with the King's request, which we might be sure that they would never do.

Describes a ceremony on Ascension Day (qu. Wedding of the Adriatic?), when the English ambassador was near him, and the Doge and the whole Signory went upon the water. Had some conversation with him about the Queen's matter, when he made excuses for himself and his brother, saying how they disapproved of what the King was doing, and how well satisfied your Majesty was with them, and how they had fallen into disgrace for telling the King what they thought of his cause. I said they had acted like good servants to tell him his error, and how he sinned against the whole of Christendom. We then came to speak of the lawyers, to whom he had spoken at Padua, Verona, and Vicenza, and he could not conceal the great doubt he had about the business.

I told him that as he had no doubt the affair was so bad that it could not be worse, he ought to ask the bishop of London and the Auditor, and this other ambassador lately come from the Emperor's court, what their opinion was after they had heard from him what he had found in these doctors to whom he had spoken. He told me that his brother had done so much with the Auditor as to persuade him that judges should be appointed, and the cause be brought before a tribunal, where the arguments between the King and the Queen might be heard. I replied, "You ought to say between the King and Mother Church, for this is what all Christendom must feel, and take up the cause as their own against the King; that this affair of the Queen must be settled with the King; that she is the daughter of queen Isabel, and the Emperor's aunt; and that the King will think well before he executes his design, as the Queen is so important a member of his kingdom; for that would be to forsake such a person as the queen of England,—and for what, except to marry as he pleased? And hereupon we touched upon other similar things, I telling him what good servants they were who undeceived him, and how bad those who forbore to do so. He admitted that I was right; and God knows what he and his brother have done in this; and your Majesty knows it also, and that all the mischief is done by the Auditor of the Chamber, and others who are with him in Bologna. What that is, I know not; but your Majesty may believe that every day they find themselves more embarrassed in this odious business.

Gave the Emperor's letter to the bishop of Chieti, and sends his answer. Wrote on the 25th all that had passed with the bishop of Vaison, and sent a copy of the conclusions desired by the king of England. Has nothing more to add on this subject. * * * Venice, 2 June, 1530.

2 June. 6423. [CROKE to STOKESLEY.]

Vit. B. XIII. 80 b. B. M.

"R^de^ in Christo pater." Gave your letters yesterday to Leonicus, who thanks you, but does not know any one at Rome whom he could ask to send you a horse; and does not think he could obtain your request from the auditor of the Chamber, as he knows him neither by face nor by fame. He asks Stokesley to procure a horse to be sent to Croke by the Bishop. Wishes him to obtain as soon as possible the letters to the friars, for in a fortnight the "Automana" are celebrated at Padua, where there will be a great concourse of friars. Urges him to obtain a letter from the bishop of Worcester before that day, as, if there is the slightest pretext of leave from the Pope, they will all be for us. Simonetus says that he will fight for us openly; that after the names had been subscribed, he had changed the word posse into debere, lest, if the conclusion were known at Rome, it might injure him or his friends. But this would be no detriment to the cause, for when leave had been obtained for all, debere could again be changed to posse; and when it was asserted that this marriage is prohibited by natural and divine law, it would necessarily follow that they must affirm that a marriage of this kind cannot be dispensed with. You have then the conclusion you wished. You have Simonetus' letters, asking you to trust what I write.

Come hither speedily, if you do not want to frustrate our attempts. Will hear from Simonetus of hindrances scarcely credible. Does not dare to write of them, lest Simonetus might be injured by its being known, especially now that his friends are engaged before the Pope in a question of 3,000 ducats.

The bishop of Vaison said that he would hinder the King's cause much more than he had hitherto done. These matters, however, are secrets between me and Simonetus. I do not wish you to have anything to do with him except about the subscriptions. It is reported here that the Pope and Emperor have agreed that the former shall in no way allow the King to be separated from his Queen, and the latter will not allow a General Council during Clement's life. "O libido! O iniquitas! O tyrannis!" You must see how necessary now will be friends like Simonetus, Thomas, and father Francis Georgius. The young Italian forgot to relate how often the auditor's servant persuaded him to induce Croke to return to England, for he could not endure the heat of Italy. "Vides ergo quam illi regis [causam] velint promoveri qui neminem patiuntur æquo animo ei fideliter [servire.] Quid responderit sibi senatus multis mendaciis ad te" * * *
The same person told Croke that he and his nephew had heard from an influential senator that the Prothonotary had put everything into confusion in the Senate about this matter; and that when he said to the bishop of Vaison (taking De Cassalis' word for it) that he believed the Pope allowed every one to speak freely, the Bishop replied that he was surprised, for the De Cassali had often told him that they were sorry that the King had commenced this cause, and that they had always opposed it.

Begs him, if he loves the King, not to put off coming hither. He can come secretly if he wishes. Will pay his expences for a time if he will lodge with him. His house, though not as magnificent as De Cassalis', is more elegant and more suitable for transacting the King's affairs. If he goes thither, none of our friends will go to see him, for they have all been offended by Cassale, and they fear that he is a spy of the Pope. Will rejoice to have him as a guest, and will take him to a beautiful church, and to gardens and porticos where any one can come to him freely without suspicion. Sent yesterday by a courier letters to the King, with a copy of the conclusion and the subscriptions, "quas mihi Simonet . . . . mentionem de omnibus quæ vel D. tuæ dederam mittenda vel apud eandem reliqueram, facta." Sends him a copy of Ghinucci's recent letter, and will show him, when he comes, what untruths it contains. Asks for a reply by the first messenger. If he were not waiting for him, would have been at Verona or elsewhere on the King's business. Venice, 2 June.

Was told by the Prothonotary yesterday that he thought the bishop of Vaison had not complained to the Senate, but to certain senators. Told him he wondered that he had not expostulated with the bishop of Vaison for his insult to the King, for the Bishop was here on the day he came. He replied that Croke had written, that he said the Bishop had complained to the Senate. "Vides ergo ut huic queamus c . . . . fidereque. Illud addo collocutum eum cum quibusdam secreto sed illos nec posse n[ec velle] determinare, (inconsulto senatu toto) responsum. An non vides igitur ut . . . . iste in literis ad te. 2. "Conclusio Simoneti."

We, having consulted the undermentioned masters and doctors of theology, think that it is not lawful for a Christian to marry his deceased brother's wife, nor, having married her, to keep her, even if [the brother] died without children; for such a marriage is prohibited by Divine law, is contrary to reason and morals, and neither ought to be nor can be dispensed with.

Vit. B. XIII. 81 b. B. M.

Encloses a copy of a letter of my lord of Worcester. Asks the King to note the confession of the feigned names which he sent to Croke; and his denial that he ever wrote concerning John Francis Marinus, which is contrary to letters of his, which the King already has. He calls him only by the name of a general, but Croke, in the letters to which his are an answer, called him by all three names; so that that excuse is of no use. Concerning his other denial, he wrote on 16 April. "Quod vero Paulo dederim literas regias huic deferendas, quod inquis facere non debueram, et eo magis faciam." Dares not write all that he perceives in handling the King's causes. Begs the King not to allow the Venetian ambassador or other Italians to see his letters, for fear of danger to Croke and the King's other solicitors here, and for fear of hindrance to his causes. If the King will dissemble his displeasure for a time, doubts not to compass his matters shortly.

Father Francis told him that when the bishop of Vaison burnt the names which he had got for the King, and threatened him, he said to the Bishop that De Cassalis avouched to him that the Pope was content that every man should freely and liberally speak his thoughts. To which the Bishop replied with indignation that he wondered that the De Cassalis should say this, for they had often said to him that they were grieved that the King should have entered on this matter, and they had always opposed it. If licence can be obtained everything is the King's. The ambassador says the Senate will never give answer, and Croke is sure they will not without other letters from the King. Is credibly informed that this is owing to the ambassador. "I sent your Highness by my lord [of] London, the xxvij. of May, letters, and with the copy of letters . . . . . very letters of my lord of Worcester's, and other for . . . . . such advice as I have written unto your Highness . . . . . Relying on the strength of truth, promises to support the King's cause. Has done what he could to obtain the commendation and approval of others, as the signatures which he has shown to D. Richard (Croke) will testify. Will send him hereafter new signatures of approved men. The prothonotary John Casale asked him in the King's name for the conclusion he had written, and which he then gave to his brother Paul. Hears now that the Prothonotary has sent it to the Pope, and fears that some harm may happen to him in consequence.

Vit. B.XIII.82. B. M.

Went, by desire of the ambassadors of the king of England, to the Pope, and asked in his name for his Holiness's permission for Italian theologians to determine by discussion, and writings, whether it is lawful, and whether the Pope can grant a dispensation for the marriage of a man with his deceased brother's wife, there being no children, to raise up seed for his brother. To this demand the Pope answered that he would allow every one to speak and write what they thought about this question.

Thinks it advisable to inform you of this, that, relying on the testimony of my letters, you and others may be encouraged to search for the truth in this most difficult question, and may express your opinion in words or writings without fear.

R. O. St. P. VII. 239. After my last letter I was twice with the Pope to obtain some remedy against the breve which the Pope had made, and of which I sent you a copy. His Holiness answered that cardinal S. Quatuor affirms that the brief is valid, notwithstanding the objections that are made to it, and that he was ready to maintain it. I could get nothing more from his Holiness. As to any remedy for the acts of the bishop of Vaison at Venice, and leave for the King's ambassador to procure three opinions in the King's cause, his Holiness said that he did not think it right that universities and individuals should prescribe the law to him, and determine his authority; and he complained of what had been secretly done on our side in this matter. After much urging he said that our request was already provided for in his brief, by which all men are enjoined to say what they think according to their conscience. I urged that many were apprehensive of speaking, for fear of displeasing him; and requested him to write to his nuncio at Venice that he should take no offence if the persons to be nominated by our ambassador should freely express their opinions. He said he could write to the nuncio to do what was fitting, and would gratify the King's representatives in every way consistent with his honor. Write and let me know what is to be done. Vit. B. XIII. 76 b. B. M.

Has received his letters dated Rome, 21 May and 1 June, saying that Croke is dearer to him than he could have hoped to deserve. Is pleased at his acceptance of his kindness to Remigius. Had no previous knowledge of what he writes about friar Francis. If he had known it, would have informed Ghinucci. Hopes that Francis' arrival will much assist the cause, if he can speak freely. Has destroyed Ghinucci's letters, and therefore cannot assert that he wrote about John Francis what he denies, but knows that when he wrote he had Ghinucci's letters and his own before him. Is glad that he can prove his innocence about the catalogue of fictitious names. Does not know why he consults Croke about the Prothonotary's letter concerning money, as he can himself decide about it, and Croke neither ought nor dares to interfere about the disposition of the King's money in Ghinucci's possession. Wonders at his doing it, for the Prothonotary said to Croke and to the ambassadors that Ghinucci had written to him to ask Croke for money to pay the doctors, when Croke needs much more than Ghinucci had sent, for he has obtained 70 signatures beside those obtained by Francis, some of which he has given to Stokesley, and the rest he will send.

Ghinucci writes that he has paid part of the 2,000 ducats without order from the King. To show that the King has ordered it, sends a copy of the letters which Vannes says he wrote by the King's order. Has already spent almost 500 gold pieces, and asks him to provide him with more money. Has sent the account to the King, and again asked him not to forget Ghinucci's kindness to Croke, "sed thesaurario ut tibi . . . . . antur omnia mandat." Venice, 4 June.

Have received your letters by your servant Rawlyns. Much business has grown on the confirmation of your patents, "for that they passed not the chapter seal according to the mind of the parties." All things are now well stayed, "unless it be my lord of Norfolk's patent, which was confirmed with words contrary to his mind, and without my knowledge." I have explained to him that a new patent would be sent to you to sign and seal. Do it freely, with as gentle letters as you can, as it will do you much good. Your manors, &c. are in good order. Before Michaelmas I shall spend 200*l.* in reparations. The more you content the King and Norfolk, the better speed you will have. Since it is the King's pleasure to have you "absent from that diocese," you must thank him for his goodness to it, "and also to stablish you with so good and so wise a convent" as you have of the convent of Winchester. I have no doubt of fulfilling your wishes touching your servant Rawlyns. 7 June. 6437. MAI to CHARLES V.

Add. MS. 28,580, f. 125. B. M.

Along with the Emperor's letter of the 22nd May, and afterwards with a letter of the Comendador Major de Leon of the 29th, received copies of what Rodrigo Niño had written from Venice upon the affair of the queen of England. What has since happened in the business is that the same ambassadors have sent to Bologna both Dr. Benet who came from the Emperor, and the bishop of London, whom they ordered to return into France, and there, with the aid of Raphael Casal, who is a Bolognese, have been endeavoring to obtain the votes of the lawyers. The Pope, being forewarned, has ordered his legate and governor to counteract them; and they have managed so that the English have been able to obtain only two or three votes. Has given notice to the Pope that the English intend to make a similar effort at Perosa, and he has taken measures accordingly. Has, however, written to Don Lope de Soria at Sienna to obtain all the opinions he can there, or at least that of Philip Decio, who lectures there, and is the greatest man of all Italy. Has sent a copy of the case to the president in Castile, that the lawyers may take more time to study it. Sends another copy to the Emperor. Has had some conversations with the advocate and proctors of the Emperor and Queen. At last commenced the cause, which has proceeded for two terms by contumacy (por contradictas que llaman aca, lo que en España se dice por rebeldia), no one appearing for the King; and so we shall proceed, although we have little time, it being the eve of the holidays.

On this account I besought the Pope the other day to give a signatura that the cause might proceed, notwithstanding the holidays. He said he wondered that the Queen and we had not seen fit to do anything extraordinary in this matter. I said neither your Majesty nor the Queen desired any special favors.

Hears that the English ambassadors enter today; and the Pope has told me that he understands from them the King will be content to promise not to attempt anything there, provided the Pope and we are willing not to proceed here on our side. I said this proposal had already been discussed several times at Bologna, and that I would not cease to demand justice unless I had orders from your Majesty. The auditor of the Chamber thinks these ambassadors have come to get the matter settled (a que se viesse esto) since your Majesty would not have it done at Bologna; and he believes the king of England would be content to agree with us about the persons who shall give judgment on it; but to this I shall by no means consent without orders from your Majesty.

The Pope has told me more plainly what I wrote to your Majesty that he knew very well, namely, that owing to the death of a lady to whom the duke of Norfolk had married, or intended to marry, his son, they have treated to marry the same son to the princess of Wales; for which reason Boleyn has lost much hope of the marriage of Mrs. Anne with the King; and the King has spent much money in buying goods and lands for the support of the lady. This is thought to be evidence that he begins to give up hope of his suit, because, if he meant to make her queen, she would have no need of these things. Rome, 7 June 1530.

6440. FRANCIS and CHARLES V.

Copy made, 8 June 1530, by Francis Bouret, canon of Tournon, almoner of the French king, and secretary of the cardinal de Tournon, and John de Larrandoette, curé of St. Martin de Bomint, Dax dioc., notaries apostolic, of an instrument made by them on 3 June 1530, 6 Clement VII., in the old castle at Bayonne, stating that on that day Sir Francis Brian informed Loys de Flandres, lord of Praet, councillor and chamberlain, and William des Barres, lord of Recin, secretary of Charles V., his ambassadors, that, in accordance with the treaty of Cambray of 5 Aug. last, the King had commissioned the cardinal de Tournon, Anne de Montmorency, great master and marshal of France, and the bishop of Bayonne, to deliver the obligations and jewels to the Emperor, by letters patent dated London, 19 Feb. 1529, 21 Hen. VIII. He therefore offered to deliver the obligations and the fleur de lys on the delivery of the dauphin of Viennois and the duke of Orleans; but the Emperor's ambassadors objected to an obligation for 32,000 florins given by the late emperor Maximilian, 3 July 1512, as no mention had previously been made of it, and desired time to consult the Emperor or the Archduchess. The English ambassador then offered to deliver the letters of general quittance on the delivery of the French princes, as his master desired their freedom and the observance of the treaty, but without prejudice to his right to the said obligation of 32,000 fl.

Present:—Antony de Bourg, LL.D., lieutenant civil of Paris, and president of the Queen Mother's council, Philip Vaucher, greffier de Dole, the Queen's secretary, John de le Sauch, secretary of the Emperor and the Archduchess, William Preudhomme, general of the King's finances, and Gilbert Bayart, secretary of his finances, general of Brittany.

6441. JUAN ANTONIO MUSETTULA to CHARLES V.

The Pope has made the bishop of Tarbes a cardinal. Hears that the king of England is getting the colleges and the divines in France to declare that the Pope could not dispense in the marriage of the Queen, and that, having obtained the declaration of the canonists and divines, including some in Italy as well as his own, he wishes to effect the divorce without waiting for any other declaration from the Pope. Has told the Pope such an intrigue is diabolical, and more against his Holiness than against any one, because it will indirectly create a practice of having councils against the force of truth; and it was not to be suffered that divines or canonists as a college should determine that which belonged solely to the Court of Rome to declare. I accordingly urged him strongly to do two things: first, to proceed with the cause diligently, that a declaration from his Holiness might stop these informal opinions; secondly, that he should prohibit the colleges under censures from declaring any opinion upon the subject, without intimating it to his Holiness. 8 June. 6442. MAI to CHARLES V.

Add. MS. 28,580, f. 140. B. M.

Headed: "A su Mag^t de M. Mai, viij. de Junio de DXXX."

After he had written the other three letters which go with this, a Spanish friar arrived from England with letters from the ambassador, and told me that he had promised there to discuss the matter of the King's divorce in the general chapter of the Dominicans, which is to be held here. I told this to the cardinal of Osma, that he might know those friars. It appeared to the Pope, to Musetula, and to me that it was [well] to create a disturbance among those friars, and the English would do the contrary, and thus the play would be equal. This your Majesty did not think advisable at Bologna, so I have requested his Holiness that he should carefully and without scandal obtain the opinion of those friars here before they go,—at all events, of those who appear to him most judicious,—that he might make use of their opinions afterwards.

Yesterday the bishop of Vaison arrived, who was with your Majesty for the Pope. I saw him in the palace, and thanked him before the Pope for the good service he had done at Venice to his Holiness and your Majesty. Has already written that the Pope had told him he had good hopes of the matter of England, in consequence of the new marriage which was treated for the Princess. Yesterday he showed me an extract of a letter from France, stating that the king of England had sent a man to thank la camara de las Scripturas at Paris for the hope they have given him of obtaining documents there touching a similar case, which a king of France and of England did with consent of the Pope, and also for soliciting the votes of the doctors of Paris, as a college, saying that this is with the consent of your Majesty. And he said that he has almost all their votes individually, and that the matter has already been decided for him in a college of the canonists, and that they are still getting the opinions of divines in his favor; and another university of France, called, I believe, Anges, has written that they have found an old book written by a contemporary of St. Dominic, in favor of the King; and that a Carmelate friar, Jacobo de Lodi, who had gone upon some business into Scotland, has returned thither, and is advocating the king of England's cause, while another, Mons. de Giles, solicits it on the part of the French king. This friar says that the king of England told him in secret something which it would have been well for the Pope if he had regarded more, for it is worth a million of gold, and he would not say what it was, and that the king of England only waited the judgment of the universities to justify himself here at Rome, and to carry out his purpose. The letter was from Alberto de Carpi to the Pope, but his Holiness desired that it might be secret. I said the man was always more hot than he ought to be, but that it might be well to act upon it as if it were true, and that unless the Pope forbade the universities giving any opinion no king would have any need of the Holy See, but would obtain from two or three universities an opinion in favor of anything he wished to do.

This morning congratulated the cardinal of Tarbes on his promotion. Took occasion, however, to tell him that he understood the French king was endeavoring to obtain votes in favor of the king of England from the university of Paris, which he could not have believed, as we had agreed together to tell each other openly everything material to the preservation of the amity, and it was little to the credit of the French king that Mons. de Langeais should solicit votes in his name. He said he did not believe it, but would write about it * * * Rome, 9 June 1530.

The King will learn by the letters of the bishop of London what has been done with the jurists and theologians of Bologna, &c. He will also see that I found it necessary to go to Rome with a view to his business, and I shall leave tomorrow. I wish the King had placed the business in my hands whilst the Pope and the Emperor were here, for then it might have been managed with much less trouble, nor would the Imperialists have obtained any number of the Dominicans. I have written fully to Guron. I have the signatures of the theologians of Bologna, and before I leave will obtain the approbation of the college, with the college seal. 9 June. 6445. [CROKE to STOKESLEY.]

Vit. B. XIII. 87. B. M.

"I assure you they were and ever shall be unto me a great dis . . . . considering my pains and diligence taken with such effect as iiij. . . . . ye vj. afore me brought to no like compass." Did not send the letter of which Stokesley writes at first, for lack of money and a trusty messenger, but left it with him, because he heard that Perusa was on the way to Rome, and he thought that no one could deliver it more effectually than one of the men who was sent for that cause. If Stokesley does not care to be troubled with hearing of Croke's troubles in the King's cause, but will wink at them for the pleasure of other men, who fear that, by his fidelity and Croke's diligence, their negligence and infidelity will be espied, begs him to return the letter without displeasure, for he is sure that he will lose some honor that else he might have.

If he thought that all the bills and writings which he has obtained for his Grace would be no more available than this letter, would burn them all for shame and sorrow. Even if the writings and papers were nought, yet he would be worthy to be excused, as he has followed Stokesley's and other men's instructions. If he has not done well, he has done better than any other who has had the handling of those matters before him. Is glad to labor and jeopard his life to serve his Prince truly, and to be called a "brabeller" for opening the traitorous dealing of his familiar adversaries. Would never have meddled in this matter, which was sore against his will, if it had not been for his love and trust in Stokesley's learning and goodness. Is not content to meddle any more, but will make all the suit he can to the King to return home, for he is loth to displease Stokesley or any other of the ambassadors by showing what he could not conceal without being untrue to his Prince. Offers to be hanged, drawn, and quartered if the Cassali ever do the King any good, and do not injure him and his causes in every possible way, and beguile Stokesley and the other ambassadors. Jacobus and other Jews who came lately from Bologna report the Pope's displeasure, and that Helyas, w[hose] opinion so many subscribed gladly and without stop, cannot now get one to subscribe, "and scantly . . . . . [so] that if ye come not hither betimes by his good . . . . . [we may] hap lose both father Francis a[nd oth]er * * * and fellowship, than the King's profit and pleasure in this high and good cause, set light of my information, not of such handling and dealing of them that are bound to further his causes, nor by no means trust them whom ye see thus deal." Neither for Stokesley's nor any other's command, will trust them more than he needs.

When Stokesley comes he shall know what he would never have believed, and what he will be sorry to know. Never was noble prince so disappointed of his purpose, and delayed by "faytours;" and because his ambassador partly winks at and partly cloaks it, matters are likely to miscarry which else would do marvellously well. Will then have to bear the burden, by reason of Stokesley's and others misreports of his labors. Thinks it best to depart betimes with little displeasure than to tarry for more; for more he is sure of, if, like a true man to God and his prince, he plainly utters the untruth of these Italians, and Stokesley is displeased with him for doing so.

"By the provocation of them that care not what they spend the King and do him good," Paduanus, of whom the Prothonotary writes, has subscribed Francis' work, which the King now has. Those with whom Stokesley spoke at Bologna he is sure of as a flea in his purse. Hopes their reasoning with him was not to espy his reasons, and show them to the Pope. Is trying to get a sight of a book against the King by Felix, an Augustine friar, formerly a Jew. The Emperor's favorers in Padua and Venice are Aleander, the bishop of Chieti, and as many as our ambassador can gain. Has answered everything else in his last letter. If Stokesley goes to Casale, none of the King's friends will come to him, and he cannot go there privately. Asks him to come to his house, which, though not so big as the ambassador's, is pleasant and commodious. Venice, 9 June.

9 June. 6446. [CROKE to STOKESLEY.]

Vit. B. XIII. 86. B. M.

Received late tonight his two letters dated the 28th and the 29th. It will be hard to find in Venice more to favor our cause than we have already found, though he has not slept or been slothful. Does not approve of his advice to cause those who dare not subscribe openly to give their subscriptions to their friends, for it is not to be supposed that their friends, who perhaps will "collude" us, will do anything against them. Besides, many will pretend to be on our side, as many have already done, in order to learn our arguments. Your Lordship's hope to force them by shame at least not to be against us will be frustrate, either because they will lack shame, or because they will be sure that their friends will do nothing to shame them. As yet no such slack dealing is needed. In other places, where the ambassadors have not interfered, there is no earthly stop, as Croke will show him when he comes.

Thanks him for the assurance of his favor, and doubts not that he has largely deserved it, if there were nothing else than his good heart and diligence in coming here to serve the King, trusting only to Stokesley's conscience and learning, as nakedly as any man might come, without any instructions in words or writing. As to leaving good Mr. Cranmer behind to solicit Stokesley to be good lord to him (though then there was great need of it, for he perceived that, by the procuring of Dr. Benet and others, Stokesley seemed displeased with him for showing the untrue dealings and crafty lets which Cassale worked in the King's matter), would rather he knew from other men what Cassale has done at Verona, at Vicenza, and in the Senate. The slanderous reports of the King's cause made to Crucinus caused him to surcease of his good mind to the King, "the which . . . . . father Francis is won again, as by the copy of his letter . . . . . appear. 10 June. 6447. ROBERT SMYTHE to WOLSEY.

Has delivered his letters to Master Mores [and] Master Hennygh. Has had no answer yet, except that Hennygh said, "Would to God that your Grace would content yourself with that you have, and there is no doubt but that the King will be good and gracious to your Grace." It is said that Wolsey makes much more building there than he does, because he has men from London; and though we deny it, we cannot be believed. It is also much spoken of, that Wolsey takes Master Donington as his steward, who is not beloved in that country. Smythe made answer that "he never had staff in his hand." It is also objected that Wolsey has taken away an office he had granted to Master Edwards. Master Stobes says that he has no money for Wolsey, as he told Master Cromwell. He is now at Kingston, and on coming to London will provide a piece of bodkin or cloth of gold. Master Estton says Wolsey will get no wine from him this year, and Master Amadas that he has no plate for him. Perceives that he will deliver none unless Wolsey send him old plate. "And also as sone as here yes anny shepes off Hwol (ships of Hull) yowre Grace shal have qwales." Sends other news. Every man speaks much honor of Wolsey here, "in ordering of yourself among the gentleman in that country." Has made Wolsey's recommendations to those he named, and to many others, who heartily ask after him, as Master Treasurer, Master Controller, and Master Secretary. Most of the gentlemen in court came to him to know how Wolsey did, and were glad to hear of his behavior. Master Alward is at Ipswich, but he made answer for Wolsey's chapel books to Master Cromwell. "And as for mo bokes, we cannot get of Mayster Stobes. He sath that he yes in a premynary (præmunire), and cannot tel how he shal do. Le Grand, III. 458.

According to what I have already written to you, I have deferred till today to present your letters to the dean and doctors of theology of this university, always hoping that meanwhile you would obtain possession of the children, and that afterwards we might more surely satisfy the king of England without fear of irritating the Emperor by so doing, or causing any delay in the delivery of the children. I should have been glad if I could have dissembled further, without creating more distrust in the king of England's men, which might have been done, if we had more good men in this faculty. But I almost fear I have dissembled too much already; for if, on the one hand, we must avoid irritating the Emperor, on the other, it may be feared that the king of England, irritated by long dissimulation, will either cause Bryant to withdraw without doing anything, or find means to attain his object with the consent of the Emperor, and that on the approach of a third party Herod and Pilate will be made friends. A consideration of these dangers has induced me to present your letters. There were present, the bishop of Senlis, abbots of Premontré, Chailly, Missy, St. Martin, Laon, Vendosme, Foucambault, and others, with several deans, archdeacons, &c., all assembled by your commandment. In their presence I declared how the king of England, finding a great scruple of conscience about having married his brother's widow, which he conceived, for reasons which would be explained to them by his ambassadors, to be clearly unlawful, nevertheless desired to have their opinion upon the matter, not in the way of judgment, which they might be afraid to give, but only in form of counsel and doctrine (par forme de conseil et doctrinalement). For this reason he would have asked Francis to obtain their opinions for him, had it not been that the ambassadors of the Emperor, who was also now the ally of France, would have shown them that the queen of England was his aunt, and he would feel himself affronted if she were repudiated without reason. And for this cause they would have urged you not to allow any wrong to be done to her by the learned men of your kingdom. Seeing, therefore, that you could not refuse the request of two such allies for such counsel of learned men as you yourself would take, believing that both parties only desired to act according to reason* and conscience, you had convoked the faculty in such number as never was seen before, enjoining them, after commending themselves to God, and celebrating a mass of the Holy Spirit, to examine and discuss the articles proposed to them, all favor or fear set aside, and deliver their determination to such as you should appoint to receive it.

Beda followed me, saying that the faculty were aware of the desire of Francis to satisfy the king of England. To which, fearing that he would say too much, and that several Spaniards, Italians and Flemings, who belonged to the faculty, might take occasion to impute partiality in behalf of England, I replied, that undoubtedly the friendship between you and Henry was such that you could not refuse to undertake for him anything that you justly might; but in the matter in question, neither he could ask you, nor you him, to grant anything that was not just, the Emperor being likewise your ally, but only an impartial judgment. After this, I departed to leave them free to conclude.

Those who first deliberated were of opinion that your request was so reasonable that it could not be refused, even to the poorest person. Others thought that the faculty being subject to the Pope, from whom they have so many privileges, and as it was a matter that concerned his power, they ought not to discuss it without sending to him to know his intention, or at least to you, to know if you were aware of this opinion. Others agreeing with this, thought that while their letters should be conveyed to you, they should nevertheless begin to discuss the matter before the answer came, and when it did come, if you agreed with their remonstrances, they might suspend their deliberation. There were others, who neither approved the first nor third opinion, but adhered to the second, adding that the Pope had forbidden the matter to be discussed, and had already twice admonished the king of England. Other persons of authority replied to this,—1st, that their privileges depended on you as well as the Pope, and that they were in your kingdom; 2ndly, that it was an imputation on the Pope's honor to say that he had prohibited consolation being given to the wounded conscience of a Christian, and that such a prohibition ought not to be obeyed; 3rdly, that it was monstrous to use, in that company, such language of a Prince allied to the King their master, who had hitherto shown his zeal for Christianity, and for the union and peace of the Church. While the beadle was collecting the names and opinions, one of our masters rose up, plucked the roll out of his hands, and tore it up; on which they all rose tumultuously, saying that enough had been done, and that the majority were of opinion not to consult without writing to you and the Pope.

* Here the editor has a marginal note, stating that it appears by the letters of La Pommeraye, who was then at Brussels with the queen of Hungary, that great complaint was made there that the Emperor's ambassadors were not allowed to assemble the university of Louvain in behalf of Katharine.

Thus the assembly dissolved. The English ambassadors, who were walking in a gallery and witnessed the scene, retired to their lodgings greatly dissatisfied. They complained to me that the result had been planned by Beda and his accomplices, and that I refused to believe them when they told me so. They began writing of the matter to the King their master, and to the earl of Wiltshire. Fearing that their report might occasion trouble hereafter, I went to speak with the president, who called to him Beda, Barthelemy, Tabaty, and other authors of this discord, and after a good deal of remonstrance got them to promise that they would meet next morning, and at least conclude according to the third opinion, viz., to begin deliberating until your answer should come. This done, I returned to the English ambassadors, and persuaded them to defer writing, for God's sake.

This morning the faculty re-assembled, and concluded as above, appointing Monday next to commence their deliberations, and that the conclusion to be taken by them shall be sent, closed and sealed, to your hands, to deliver to whom you think good. The English ambassadors do not yet appear entirely satisfied. They told me roundly that they knew quite well, all that is concluded is merely to feed the King and them with words, and to keep their beaks in the water, on pretence that the matter will be discussed, though they know that no conclusion will be come to. They have some reason for saying so, for there are persons who publicly boast that the decision will be annulled in a year. If you wish to preserve the friendship of England you had better write to Dominique le Mercier, the present dean of the faculty, a man willing to obey you, that he shorten the matter without giving heed to useless and impertinent allegations. As I have been taken to task about the matter of Beda, I may state that Beda really did hold conversations to that effect with a doctor, who remonstrated with him on his intended opposition to your will. On which he replied that he knew what he was doing, and did it for your service, which the doctor might report to whomsoever he pleased. This I thought dangerous, and reported to the president, who summoned Beda before him in the church of Notre Dame, showed his powers and the danger he might occasion to you, and made him swear expressly, not only not to prevent your letters being obeyed, but to do his utmost, as if for his own life, to get the thing passed without scandal. This promise I did not at first trust, inasmuch as he had begun this plot in violation of a former promise. But as I saw the president was disposed to trust him, I did not wish to write to you again about it, or to let the ambassadors write to my lord of Wiltshire. Mons. de Senlis is anxious to be with you to tell you about the conduct of this faculty, and ask you to reform it, which is very necessary; and they are of opinion that when you have recovered the children, you should make such demonstration "de ceux qui vous ont mis en cest accessoire," that others may be more wise. Paris, 9 June.

P.S.—I have kept this letter for want of a messenger. The said ambassadors have shown me letters of yours of the 27th ult., according to which the said president had intended to be yesterday at the Congregation, and present your letters to the faculty, but he has not been able to do so from illness. I have presented them by his command. While I was with our said masters the English ambassadors arrived; one of whom, in speaking of this matter, was heard to say that we should not esteem them such novices as to abuse them on pretence of treating the matter, and conclude nothing, and that they intended to proceed in such fashion that Francis should know that, all amity set apart, he had declared himself the friend of a prince who was not ungrateful, and who would not refuse him that which could not be refused in conscience to any person in the world. Thus you will see they suspect that the opposition of the doctors is with your consent. It might be advisable to write a word to the earl of Wiltshire, for fear he prejudice his master too much, and perhaps also to De Vaux. Paris, 12 June.

R. O. St. P. VII. 239.

On Monday a letter came to me from the bishop of Worcester, dated Rome, Whitsun even, of which I send a copy. I have also received from him the brief of which I wrote last. You may now see what favor is to be expected from the Pope, and his sincerity in wishing you to believe that by his brief he was willing every man should write in your cause according to his conscience; for he evidently means the reverse. He was plainly irritated by your words respecting Florence, which he more regards than ever he did any victory in his life; and when the bishop of Vasona showed him the success of your agents there, he devised these inhibitions.

The courier who arrived here on the first Saturday of May, and passed to Rome, crossed from England to Flanders for fear of being searched. Antonio de Vivaldis despatched him. The prince of Orange goes to lay siege to Pisa. Add. MS. 28,580, f. 145. B. M.

Wrote on the 7th what had been done about the affair of the queen of England. It is becoming more and more important, for the English ambassadors are using every effort, and have not only said at Bologna what I wrote to your Majesty, that the Pope would lose the obedience of that kingdom, but that if he did not comply with their wishes the King would lend the Florentines 100,000 ducats. Have nevertheless pursued their plea of contumacy against the King, and now we are to draw up articles (agora se ha de articular); but these lawyers are much confused, and I too, at not being able to procure anything in England, and not possessing either the originals or authentic copies. (Marginal note by Cobos:—Because the original brief is here, which is too important to be sent abroad, "siendo menester se abtornara (?) con el Cardenal y que se embiara.")

I have demanded two things of the Pope:—First, to give us a brief forbidding the university of Paris or any other to write in this matter collegialmente, as they are not well informed, not having heard the parties. (Marginal note:—Let them labor to get this brief for Paris.) Secondly, a brief to enable us to proceed in the cause, notwithstanding the holidays of the first week of July, which is a thing commonly given in causes of importance. Yesterday Dr. Benet was at the palace to kiss the Pope's foot. The bishop of London remains at Bologna, we know not why; it is said, to recover from some illness, though we never heard he was ill. When I heard Benet had left, I visited the palace, and found the Pope much disturbed. He showed me a Latin letter from the king of England, making great complaints of the Pope, that he did not answer his expectations; for the Pope had expressed his willingness to give audience to the bishop of London in this matter, y que se lo havia embiado a Bolonna, and would not listen to him,—which was not acting judicially; and that if his Holiness continued to delay the matter till September, Henry promised him that nothing new should be done there, and that he would wait and endure anything sooner than complain of his Holiness, que despues no podria dexar dello aunque forçado.

The Pope says he never asked to hear the bishop of London until the latter importuned him at Bologna, when he told him que no tenia porque si havia de subir su juicio; also he denies having promised to prorogue the cause till September unless he had obtained a surety that the king of England would not do anything new on his part, because England and the Emperor, being nearer each other than to him, might have arranged it among themselves, and he never promised more. I replied in jest, that now I should see if he would give me the brief for proceeding during the holidays. I was very suspicious of this delay till September, which is two or three times alluded to in the letter, fearing that it would encourage them to new devices.

Arguments used to the Pope against delay. They say it is the duke of Norfolk's daughter-in-law who is dead, and that Boleyn desires to marry his (the Duke's) son to Mistress Anne,—which may be believed as being good for all parties; first, for her, as she cannot marry the King, that she should marry the greatest lord in the realm; and secondly, to the King, as he cannot marry her. This is the third version of the story; I hope the true one at last. Yesterday the auditor of the Chamber and Benet asked brother Felice de Prato to write for the King, and he refused, neither would he show them what he had written on our behalf. Rome, 14 June 1530.

Further remarks of Cobos on the above letter, generally approving of Mai's conduct, and urging him to insist on the commission to proceed during the holidays, and to get the Pope to excommunicate the King if he proceed on the opinions of the universities.

only refused to admit, but recalled those which we had already made, saying that the Pope had commanded him not to proceed in the cause without first giving him a reason, because he was not satisfied as to the principle,—an excuse evidently meant to put the matter over the holidays.

Today, in chapel, at the vespers of Corpus Christi, I told Dr. Benet that I had to proceed in this cause, and wished to intimate it to him that if he had a mandate he should present it in judgment, and if not, I should be discharged of having done what was right.† He acknowledged my courtesy, and said he had no power, because the King, thinking that the cause would not proceed till September, had sent him no instructions. This looks like a ruse to excuse the Pope for not granting the commission we desire. He said further that he hoped the cause would come to a good end, and that the Pope had already told him that I would do nothing for 20 days, and it would be best to be liberal in a matter in which one could not excuse oneself, for nothing would be gained by one or two terms, que haria en contradictas; which would only irritate the King, "y que si ay el supiera lo que supo en Boloña donde le alcançaron los poderes e instructiones de su Rey que el lo impetrara de V. M. y que si supiera que era llegado el embaxador que ha de venir por su rey a V. M. que se lo hoviera escripto con esto correo, y que esto es servicio de la Reyna."

I told him that your Majesty had given frequent orders to prorogue, and I, for my part, had done the same without consulting you or the Queen, and that now I would not dare to do so.

‡ Has received letters today from Don Lope de Soria, who says that he has spoken with Philip Decio, a great professor at Sienna, to whom I had written to ask his vote on our behalf, and that he has excused himself because the English have already given him money; nevertheless, hearing what Don Lope told him, he would consider the matter well. And so I have written to him again, to see if we could do what my host at Bologna did, that, great man as he is and well read, he may undeceive them‖

Thanks the Emperor for his letter, dated Inspruck, 7 May. Hopes he will always endeavor to preserve Christendom from error. Will do what the Emperor has commanded. Has instructed Francis Bonvalot to take measures to prevent this faculty from deciding, knowing that the most of the doctors were suborned, and had signed to the invalidity of the marriage. I notified the same thing to Madame (Margaret). Had no remedy, notwithstanding the diligence of the Imperial ambassadors, for the King has expressly commanded by two letters that the question be there determined. The utmost violence and disorder have prevailed in the Council. Many of those who favor the Queen are either dying or dare not speak, or absent themselves. It is three days since they began to deliberate. I beg your Majesty immediately to get the Pope to dissolve this Council under censures, annulling all that has been done, and depriving those who favored the King of England of all their benefices. Has sent a messenger to the Queen and to Madame informing them of everything. Has been told that the king of England has been twice admonished to do his duty to the Queen, and has

Le Grand, III. 482.

Yesterday morning I communicated to the King in detail all that you wrote to me on the 14th, adding such remarks as occurred to me; among other things, that I had heard you were slightly indisposed from the labor daily imposed upon you, and that your illness might well have been increased by these last news received from here. On this he asked me if I had written anything to you to give you pain, for his intention had been quite the contrary. I said I had obeyed his commands, and that by your answer you were aware of his satisfaction with your services, but that you were afraid he was in some trouble or perplexity about the above matter, which is what you have been doing everything in your power to avoid. I assure you if you had heard his answer you would have been greatly pleased. Finally, I told him the substance of your two letters, when he expressed himself greatly satisfied with all you had done, and said that he was very glad so good an issue had been found on either side, and that in your answer to the Admiral you had so fully followed his intention. I think this is all that you can expect at present, until you return, when you will be at leisure to consider what more can be done. You may be sure Madame will be your friend in everything, as I suppose your sister has taken care to let you know.

I had a little conversation with the Admiral on the subject, much like what I had before, and told him of your answer to what I had written to you. On which he cut me short, expressing himself honorably about the loving answer you had made him, and repeating part of the charge either to the secretary, who in your letters might have added by accident a touch of the pen more than you had passed, or else to the occasion that was given you that Rabaudanges had not understood his answer. I did not discuss the matter with him further, though you will see that imputing it either to the secretary or Rabaudanges is to justify his cause, and condemn yours; for which reason I have always pressed upon the King, that, considering the situation in which you are placed, you could have done no less than you did, and that you would not have dissembled so much for your own father as you did for the other. I hope you have noted what I lately wrote to you to the elect of Tours. I have been all day where the King is, in the country; but as Madame has risen late, and the King has not left here all day, I have not been able to speak with him. I have, however, at length communicated with your sister, to whom I told what was pressing before the arrival of the King and the Admiral.

Here follow some jocular details relating to Mons. St. Mor, of no historical importance.

The king of England's matter has been proposed at Paris. Where there was no possibility of withdrawing, Beda played the demoniac, "et s'est party la chose sans rien faire." The King wishes it to be begun again, and, if necessary, that Beda be sent to him, for it is a mere pretence (?) (car sans fondement et de ses semblables, est) that he ought not (to vote), even if the King commanded him, without orders from the Pope. The Emperor's ambassadors last night made great remonstrances about it. The King showed them clearly that he cannot deny, either to friend or enemy, liberty to clear his conscience of scruples by consulting the learned men of his kingdom. So that at last they did not know what to reply, except to demand a safeguard for the Spanish doctors of Paris, that the English ambassadors should not kill them, which was readily granted to them. Believe me, that, in spite of several commands addressed by the King to my brother to get this business to proceed, he has done everything possible to stop it, and has been very lukewarm while I was at Bayonne. This evening the Prince de la Roche-sur-Yon is to come and thank the King for the benefit conferred on him. Bordeaux, 17 June.

If he say it is a matter of conscience on which he must consult the Pope, you must forbid him, as this would be against the rights and privileges of the kingdom. 6462. [BENET] to HENRY VIII.

R. O. By our common letters in Latin, sent by bearer, and by a Latin letter of the 13th of last month, written by my lord of Worcester and subscribed by me, and by another of the 23rd ditto, from my lord of Worcester. Mr. Gregory, and me, you will have fully understood what has been done since my coming here in your cause, and the proceedings of the Queen's agents. Because of your special instructions sent to my lord of London, that I should be wary in coming here, and suffer nothing to pass to the innovation of any process, or to the prejudice of your cause, I have omitted nothing that might confer to the same; and by myself, as well as with my lord of Worcester and Mr. Gregory, have used my best efforts. When I was with the Pope alone he communicated to me what I write apart in this letter. I was with him on the Saturday after Corpus Christi Day, when my lord of Worcester was diseased. The day after Corpus Christi Day the Emperor's ambassador had with great exclamations obtained of the Pope to send for Capusuke, ordering him to proceed in the King's cause according to justice, which he might not let. When my lord of Worcester and I had knowledge of this, as Worcester was ill, I went alone to the Pope, lamenting his departure from the order he had taken with Capusuke three days before, seeing that from such variation many inconveniences would follow. At last, after the Pope had resolved what he would do for stopping the Emperor's ambassador not to follow that process, the Pope fell into communication of your matter, and said that Maius, the Emperor's ambassador, had showed him there were many of the Emperor's council here, who feared that my lord of London's tarrying at Bonony and his going to Venice was for no other purpose but to get as many opinions of the divines as he and others of your agents could obtain between this and September; and for that reason your Highness desired suspension till then, and that then, without regarding the authority of the Church, you would attempt something to the prejudice of the Queen; and that was the reason the Imperialists desired quick process. Maius had told him he feared no such thing, "for he said there be in this matter many articles, amongst the which one is, that the Queen was not known by your Highness' brother;" and this must be determined by law, and both parties must have the benefit of the law. "I said that my lord of London only tarried at Bonony, that your Highness had ap[poin]ted that he and [I?] should have come hither unto his Holiness," as he knew by the letters which I brought, but because he was sickly at the time he could not come; that you wished the opinions of divines for the rectification of your conscience and the justification of your cause; and for proof of the article desired, it was very easy, for that prince Arthur and the Queen had been many nights together, as was proved before his Legate. He said that the Imperial ambassador objected to the depositions received before the Legate, "and said because they were received post" * * *

I s[hall] have sundry letters to get him to the King's part." Howbeit Paul de Cassalis has been over all these parts, and has spoken with those whom Croke had already retained. Thus he and his brother have got into their hands the counsel of Peter Zanniboni, of Verona, prior of the Servites, written at Croke's instance. Has now given him better instructions, and he has promised to write again, and get as many subscriptions as he can. He told Croke of Dionysius, procurator of their order, who pretends to have written for us, and has written against us, and he and friar Angelus of Bologna have taken the writings to Rome. He and Croke have attempted Jews here, but they say they have such advice from Venice that they dare not write. At Vincenza, showed Anshelmus a copy, without names, of the ambassador's letters to friar Francis. After reading them he ran in a fume to an altar, took out the super altare, kissed the m[ass], and sware by God's altar and the Gospels that he never told nor wrote to the bishop of Vaison about the subscriptions, friar Francis, or any man who moved him in the King's cause at Vincence. He desired Croke to tell Francis that even in this heat he would go to Rome to defend his honor. He said also that no man moved him to do anything in the King's cause; that he never saw Silvester's name subscribed, and therefore that suggestion could not be true; that the ambassador was in the country with the bishop of Vaison, and at Vicenza at the house of Mark Antony de Godis; that the Bishop came to Vicenza to hear Francis preach, and afterwards had this matter disputed in his house, at which the only words that Anshelmus spoke were that he knew that the question had been formerly discussed at Bologna; that his friendship with the bishop of Vaison was too great for him to need to go about to win favor of him, for they were brought up together as children; Rome was the place, and not Vicenza, to make suit for the Pope's favor.

Has much to tell him about Francis, which he will not write. Begs him, as he loves the advancement of the King's matters, not to delay his coming hither. "I shall not much more prevail t . . . . King's causes than I have, nor they nother; they [have] so encumbered the King's causes themselves, for e[nvy] . . . Paulus de Cassalis hath been renewed." * * * Remembers that the ambassador told him that the bishop of Verona would not meddle.

Asks his advice. Is sick. This is not the first time he has put his life in jeopardy to serve the King. Fears from misreports that he will have no thank, but blame. "In the [b]erge toward Venice from Padua," Sunday, 19 June.

6467. [WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.]

R. O.

Has received the King's letter, dated Windsor, 21 June, touching the complaint made against Wolsey by a Breton, the bearer of the said letter, which set forth that having been taken prisoner in the last war, and brought to England, he was allowed to depart and return to England with merchandize for payment of his ransom, but on his return was robbed of his goods by Englishmen in the same ship with him; and that, the goods having been put under arrest during his suit for justice, Wolsey, though he had given letters of privy seal to the contrary, caused them to be delivered to the said malefactors. "Although it is long since this took place," and "by reason of my great age, great heaviness and calamity, my remembrance is not so fresh and quick as it hath been," will relate the matter to the best of his recollection. In 14 Hen. VIII. during the war with France, a Breton ship was taken by Will. Gardyner and Rob. Chapplain, and being brought to Jersey, not only it, but the captor's ship, was put under arrest at the suit of the owner, on the ground that the capture had been made within the limits of the Island. Complaint was made to Wolsey, who was then chancellor, who, finding that the prize was taken on the high seas, and that the officers of the Island were not indifferent judges, ordered that the attachment should be discharged, and that the matter should be heard before the Council. He accordingly made out letters to this effect, dated at Hampton Court, 19 Sept., not knowing that any other matter was in dispute except whether the capture was within the jurisdiction of the Isle. Shortly afterwards, being with the King at Newhall, he was informed by Sir Ric. Wingfield that the ship belonged to some Bretons who were his prisoners, who were coming to England under a safe-conduct from my lord Admiral with the said goods for payment of their ransom. On this, Wolsey and others of the Council devised a placard, dated at Newhall, 27 Sept., for the attaching not only of the goods and ship but of the said Will. Gardyner and Rob. Chaplayn, as this bearer can testify. Wingfield thus recovered most of his goods, and Gardyner was committed to the Tower till he should make restitution of the rest. Thus Wolsey's letters to discharge the arrest made at Jersey were passed before the King's letters of placard were obtained. Begs Henry upon his knees not to think that he ever willingly did as Chancellor anything not consonant with equity. "From my poor manor of Suthwell, &c."

Add. MS. 28,580, f. 182. B. M.

Wrote on the 15th what took place that day with the English ambassador at vespers, and how the Auditor had revoked all the terms (los terminos) which he had made in the cause, although nothing remained except to give in the articles which were already made, and the time was amply sufficient to obtain before the holidays compulsory powers (compulsoriales) to try the matter during the holidays. But since they have revoked them, it will not be possible to make new arrangements before that time.

I complained of this to the Pope lately, and expressed myself as temperately as I could. He answered that he would remedy it, and accordingly sent for the commissary, and ordered him to prosecute the cause and do justice. I have since used all efforts with the commissary to ascertain if this be an evasion on the part of the Pope, but I have been able to obtain no other answer.

The other day the Pope sent me to Sanga, saying that he had spoken with the English ambassador, and saw a fair way of terminating the cause well, and that he wished me to know it, because he could do nothing before the holidays, as there are but three or four audiences, and more than twelve would be required to renew the terms (reiterar los terminos); that it would be better to concede graciously what could not be sold, especially as he did not believe the commission to proceed in the holidays could be granted.

Discussions with the Pope on the subject. Conversations with Cardinal Osma.

The Pope at last agreed to prosecute my terms until an answer should be received from Your Majesty to my former letter, when the prorogation could be made with greater authority. * * * Rome, 21 June 1530.

22 June. 6470. CROKE to HENRY VIII.

R. O. St. P. VII. 241.

Is uncertain whether his letters, and the bills, books, and writings which he has sent to the King, have come to his hands. Fears that the whole or great part of his letters have been kept from his knowledge. There never was noble prince so abused by the malice and craft of those whom he trusts. If men had been diligent, the cause would long ago have been approved by all the doctors of Italy, considering that now, although the Pope and the Emperor threaten all who approve, the King has already, by Croke's diligence, 80 subscriptions and counsels, besides those that were burnt. These, father Francis said, numbered 30,—9 being doctors, whose names, with the new names got by Simonetus, Thomas, and Francis, Croke encloses. The whole number is therefore 110,—74 being doctors, and the others Observants of good reputation and learning. John Francis Marinus has yet sent none; and none have come from Verona, though many have promised writings and subscriptions, if they can get licence. Since the ambassador was there, the Pope has written a sharp letter to the bishop of Verona, dated 21 May, by the desire of the Imperial ambassador, who, with the bishop of Vaison, made search for the letters of the bishop of Verona to the bishop of Chieti in the King's favor. No one knew of these letters but Croke and the ambassador. He is familiar with the Imperial ambassador, and was with the bishop of Vaison in the country, when he came to Vicenza to burn father Francis' writing, and was with Mark Antony de Godis, a doctor of law at Vicenza, who was content to write for the King, and took instructions of father Francis, but he afterwards returned them, and refused to meddle. His enclosed letter to father Francis is untrue. The King can judge what Sir Gregory has done at Milan by the enclosed copy of Crucinus' letters, whom, as appears by other letters also enclosed, father Francis has again reconciled to us. Sends also instructions in the hand of Ghinucci's servant. The mention of the King's protestation therein slanders the King's cause, and has alienated many men. Thinks this clause was put in by the Italians to injure the cause. They attempt secretly to hinder it, to ascribe other men's pains to themselves, and to inform the Pope of every man's doing to his hurt. The Pope now knows of Pagninus' writings.

The Senate's answer was procured by the ambassador, concerning whose behavior he encloses a letter of father Francis. Doubts not that the bishop of London will also inform the King of it. Incurs great danger by writing thus openly, for Casale and others have such friends about the King that they know the tenor of his letters ten days before they arrive, and are advised of all that Croke and others write. Not long ago Ghinucci's servant asked a servant of Croke's to find out when he would return to England, and to inform the Bishop. Fears at his return not only bodily harm, but the loss of all the original writings and subscriptions, unless the King makes it known that he will require of their hands the death of his servants, or any harm that may happen to them. Doubts not many of his letters are kept from the King's knowledge. Has kept copies of them in a book. Asks for a commission and instructions. His diets are expended. Has no money to prosecute the King's causes.

Little good will be done here, but the profit will be in the other towns in the dominion of Venice and the dukedom of Milan. If the King wishes him to travel, must ask for provision both for diets and retaining men. The Pope has sent a brief to father Francis, as men say, to make him cardinal. Venice, 22 June 1530.

R. O. Asks pardon for writing such a long letter, and desires him to take the trouble to hear it read himself. Unless the King does so, Croke can never remedy the great impediments which are daily contrived to hinder his proceeding with the King's cause, nor will he ever know whether the King has received the seven letters sent to him. Kept a copy of everything sent; but his fear is the greater, because he sent with each letter other letters which it behoved the King "not for much money to lack the knowledge of." Venice, 22 June.

R. O. In consequence of the dangers he may incur from those who secretly injure or openly oppose the King's cause, begs him to allow no one to read these letters. Has tried to serve the King in his cause, but hindrances have been caused by certain persons. When Croke first entrusted the King's cause to him, everything went on well; but when the copy of the King's letter to him came into the hands of the person to whom, as Croke had advised, he had pretended that he would not undertake the cause, fortune soon became adverse. While working with success at Vicenza, was attacked by the bishop of Vaison, nuncio apostolic, who spoke against him to the governor of the city, and then to the provincial of his Order, who was about to sign, using many accusations and threats of excommunication against Georgio and all who were about to sign. The matter was then brought before the Senate, where he defended himself and the cause, declaring that he was acting for the cause of justice, that he had taken up the cause not as the King's but God's, and that he was neither a breaker of the laws nor a conspirator against the Emperor or the Pope. Easily cleared himself in this way, the Senate being well disposed to the King, and wishes he could as easily get free from those who secretly oppose him.

While at Vicenza, had obtained a promise from Dr. Mark Antony de Godis not only to write, but also gain his father, a celebrated advocate, in whose house the prothonotary Casale was staying, but he afterwards sent back the instructions, and refused to meddle. Again, had gained by means of Francis Crucinus, a Milanese noble, almost all the doctors of theology and law; and Crucinus' treatise had been approved by seven famous doctors and the bishop of London. Croke then wrote to Ghinucci for money for the doctors who had signed, but received in answer directions to be sparing, and entertain them with hope. Nevertheless, Francis writes that he was offered 50 crs. through Sir Gregory de Casalis, with whom we had not communicated. What is worse, it has been divulged that the cause was the King's, as Crucinus writes, though without mentioning names. Has had great difficulty in conciliating him. Without these obstacles would have had little difficulty in gaining most of the learned men here. The obstacles are caused by the envy of those who have done nothing in the cause, and ought to have done much. Venice, 1530, 10 kal. Julii.

R. O.

Confession of John Lawrence, formerly servant to Mrs. Lacie, of London, widow, and of Robert Turner, late of Warton, co. Lanc., taken before Sir John Dunham and Wm. Disney, treasurer of the Household, and Hugh Fuller, auditor to cardinal Wolsey, at Southwell, 20 June 22 Hen. VIII. —Was servant with Mrs. Lacie at St. Antonine's, London, where a priest named Richard, a sanctuary man of St. Alban's, or else falsely professing priesthood, had a wife named Charity. The same Richard sent a man to Lawrence, then in the church of St. Thomas Acres, who brought certain picklocks under a Spanish cloak. Next day Lawrence rode into Kent to Mrs. Knevet, daughter to Lacie, who gave him a noble for her mother, of which she denied the receipt; whereupon Lawrence, taking offence, visited the sanctuary man at St. Martin's, when they agreed to meet at the Libberd's Head, in St. Sythe (Osith's), London, 25 April, and agreed with one Robert Turner to rob Mrs. Lacie. Description of the way the robbery was committed, and a list of the goods stolen, consisting chiefly of silver and other valuables; also of the persons to whom part of the property was delivered. The sanctuary man is described as being "whitely visaged," with a sharp nose, light abren (auburn) hair, a little beard, near of the same color, and commonly accustomed to wear a Spanish cape, and sometimes a coat of Orange tawny, and white hosen.

R. O. I have seen what you have communicated to me, sc. the objection which they make against our determination, founded on the "lost chapter de Divortiis;" to which I have made answer, as you will see below. I have seen the brief and sententious reply of our Pisan friend, whom for a long time I have regarded as a most learned man, and of the safest opinions. He agrees with ours. I have also seen the whole decretal of Innocent, from which is extracted the first chapter to Augustine, bishop of England; upon which I have founded our reply. Although the canonists consider the said objection to be of some moment, it has no weight with a theologian.

I return to you the copy of our writings, because Piacenza has no qualified professor of our own or any other Order. They will have to be corroborated by subscription in our convents of Lombardy. They are simply readers, not judges. On this account I desire you to show our writings to the late father-regent and the present regents of the Dominicans and Franciscans." Ask, without being influenced by any affection for me to subscribe, whether I have written the truth; if not, let them state their objections. This is the duty of a true doctor, and not to acquire a name by soliciting votes. As for several days I have suffered from spitting blood, I must write no more. Piacenza, 24 June 1530.

R. O. I have received your letter dated Southwell, 19 June, and perceive that you are discomfited at the process against you directed to the sheriff of Yorkshire. I do not consider it dangerous, and as I have examined the clerks, it was of common course. I was not privy to it, nor your council, else the matter might have been discharged without further process. You may be sure of favorable justice; and though the writ may import hard words, it is but a common writ for the King. No man's person or land was ever attached by such a writ, and therefore I advertise you for your quietness not to think anything of it. You may be always sure of lawful speed here, according to justice, as I am bound, and as the King's pleasure is continually notified to me and others, according to his accustomed manner for administering indifferent justice to all his subjects. Add. MS. 28,580, f. 185. B. M. "From his last letter he has learnt that the king of France and the king of England not only encourage the Florentines, but send them also money. That is clear from the correspondence which Scalengues has taken from the messenger of Malatesta Baglione. Since that time this news has been confirmed by letters of the papal nuncio in France, who writes that the Imperial ambassador at the French court has discovered the same intrigue.

"Another piece of news of importance is this. Malatesta Baglione informed the Colonel Pirro very secretly that the Florentines attempted to poison the Pope, and that they were sending for that purpose a man to Rome, with all the instruments necessary for poisoning. He gave a description of that man, saying that although he served the Florentines as captain general, he despised such dishonorable deeds, and was in all other respects a servant of the Pope.

"Pirro, who is a colonel in the Imperial army, watched the poisoner and caught him. When he was searched a great number of small bottles were found full of poison, and certain tablillas, which those were to take who were to prepare the salve for the Pope† in order not to be envenomed by the poison. Pirro conducted the prisoner to the prince (of Orange), where he confessed the whole conspiracy, and named certain very confidential servants of the Pope as complices. The Prince sent the colonel Pirro and the poison and the instruments to Rome. Communicated the whole affair to the Pope, who is very thankful to the Prince and to Malatesta Baglione. It is probable that Malatesta, who has not received the letters (from France and England), is ready to surrender, and wishes to gain the friendship of the Pope.

"The Pope has ordered strict investigations in order to discover the whole conspiracy. It is, however, necessary to treat this affair with great secrecy, in order not to betray Malatesta Sigismundo da Rimini, &c. Rome, 25 June 1530.

"Supposes that he knows already that the king of England is determined to be divorced from his wife the Queen. The Pope has ordered that the case shall be decided in Rome. The English, however, do all in their power to procure so many opinions of universities and other learned bodies and scholars in favor of the demand of the king of England, that he (the Emperor) is forced also to have recourse to this irregular expedient. Has therefore ordered a short resumé of the divorce case to be drawn up at Rome. Awaits the Emperor's answer to what he wrote about the cause of England. I have learned that the English ambassadors have written to their court that the revocation of the terms was with my consent. Thinks they did this either to gain credit for diligence, or to discredit the affair with the English, pretending that the Emperor did not care about it. (Marginal note:—The Emperor is convinced that this is true, and that it would be well to send notice of it to England. Let a memorandum be given to Granvelle to write to the ambassador.) The Pope has promised to write to the king of France that the vote of Paris be not given, and I will solicit him for it. (Marginal note :—Let him procure it.) The English are much hurt at the brief that no one should give an opinion on the cause except according to conscience. They have declined the proposal I made to them, that they should submit to the judgment of the Pope, if the matter were prorogued to October; so that I have told the Pope they clearly show how they distrust him (que las han con el). I do not know if he will grant the commission that we seek. I fear not, there is so little warmth in him. The English complain much of his Holiness. (Marginal note :—He is to use all diligence, as he has written.)

Hears that the auditor of the Chamber has written that all the good lawyers and cardinals are of opinion that the King is right, and that if he were a cardinal no one would dare to contradict it in the college in his presence.

He is using every effort to be made one. (Marginal note :—His Holiness must remember the case of Tarbes, and take care what he writes.) The letter for the cardinal Egidius will be of much importance, and it would be well that the Emperor should write to the cardinal of Gaeta de S. Sisto. The coming of Ortiz will also be much to the purpose. The English are still procuring votes by money in Italy, thinking that Italian opinions will gain more credit as being neutral. Thinks 1,000 ducats ought to be spent for the service of the Queen, as we can do more with 1,000 than they with 25,000. Has already written to suggest this to her Highness. Wrote on the 18th of the coming of the bishop of London, and how till that day he had not gone to the College. He remained here six or seven days, and had communication with two Jews whether the Pope could dispense or not. Having obtained their opinions they left for Padua, along with the English ambassador here. When I knew they were gone, I told the College that the bishop of London had been here to ask them to allow their doctors to consult upon this matter, and to instruct the doctors of Padua to give their opinion, but that, finding that the Signory would not consent to anything so wicked, they had gone to Padua to get an opinion from the professors there. They told me they were sure none of the doctors would give it, but that they would consult about it; and they called their Council of Ten, whom I exhorted to remain firm in this matter. The Doge replied to me that the College at Bologna had given an unanimous opinion in favor of the king of England; at which I expressed my astonishment, as that college was founded by a Spaniard in a city of the Church. This he told me apparently to give additional value to what they would do. Has written to Mai about it. * * * Venice, 28 June 1530.

6480. [CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO] to HENRY VIII.

Has fulfilled his promise made in his last letter. The diet at Augsburg commenced on the 13th kal. of July (19 June). Certain princes of Germany who favor Luther produced their propositions, feeble, and, to say the truth, not fit to be listened to. Were it not for the obstinacy of the heretics, would be in good hope of bringing them back to the way of Christ. The piety of the Emperor and Ferdinand is a great encouragement. The proceedings of Henry, though so far away, had much contributed; and the reports of his burning the books of heretics, which have much added to his renown and strengthened others. On the 4th kal. of June (29 May), heard that Empoli, belonging to Florence, had fallen into the hands of the enemy. The Florentines are in despair, as it was their great emporium. Letters of the Nuncio bring daily expectations of victory. They were in hopes that Volataire had yielded to the Pope. Sends a copy of a letter relating to Turkish news. Augsburg, 4 kal. Jul. 1530.

R. O. Records of the Reformation, I. 559.

Has done as Foxe bade him, and committed the matter to Stella and Brunellus, the most celebrated professors of this university. Though their occupations prevent them from at present explaining copiously their opinions in writing, they have told Wotton what course they will pursue. Brunellus says that he will prove that Sybilla in this case may leave Fontaneus on her own authority, though he allows that the ordinary way by the authority of a judge would be safer and easier. If she does separate on her own authority, he does not see how her freedom to marry again can be defended; but if she actually marries again, this second marriage will be valid. If the ordinary or the Pope orders her to return to her former husband, or not to remain with her second, she will have an appeal, either to the Pope or a future Council, and thus she will remain with her second husband, and, instead of being obliged to act as prosecutor, as in the ordinary way, will be by this method the defendant. As to the intercourse between Fontaneus and Priscilla, it will be sufficient to prove their frequent use of the same bed when of lawful age. Though the confession of a man tending to dissolve marriage is not usually believed, still, as there are other proofs, this will add some strength. One thing Foxe has omitted, which they wish to know,—whether the connection of Fontaneus and Priscilla was publicly known. For the fame of it, which might be proved by two witnesses, would assist the proof, and be an additional excuse for Sybilla's leaving him.

Stella scarcely dares to advise Sybilla to marry again after leaving her husband on her own authority, if justice can be obtained in the ordinary way; but if she has married, he does not doubt that the second marriage will be a true one. If any mandates are issued against the marriage, she can protect herself by appealing to a future Council;—which differs but little from the answer of Brunellus. They agree about the proof of copulation. This is the sum of what they said, and they will at leisure put the proofs fully in writing. Sybilla will then be well counselled, and almost as Foxe most wished. He must see about a handsome reward for them, which Wotton has promised in his name. Wishes he had known how much to offer. They would perhaps have been more diligent. Fears that they doubt his performance of his magnificent promises. Has given the courier a teston, i.e., 12 French sous. Orleans, Day of SS. R. O. Extract from letters from the secretary of card. Farnese, dated Rome, 30 June.

A fortnight ago letters were intercepted stating that the Florentines had arranged to poison the Pope. His cellarer, one of his cupbearers, and others of his household, were put in prison, and, some say, confessed, but others deny it. It is enough that Christ's vicar cannot live safe by reason of wicked men. His Holiness endeavored to seize the abbot of Farfa, who was in a castle called Vicovaro, which he had taken away from his brothers, but he escaped with one servant to Monte Fortino, a castle belonging to the Magnifico Julius, brother of card. Columna; "ubi desponsavit filiam ipsius, et consummavit matrimonium, ut affirmatur." To appease the Pope, who was angry with him for keeping the Abbot, and for having by force recovered the foot soldiers whom the Papal troops took in the said castle, Julius sent away the Abbot yesterday, who, suspecting this, had levied soldiers, and begun to devastate the country. It is said that the Abbot went to the Castle of Bracciano, which was surrounded by 1,200 Papal infantry under Sciarra Columna and the count of Anguillara. Some cavalry and good part of the Papal guard, with 1,200 newly levied foot, have gone to their aid. Are expecting hourly to hear of their success. Heard today that one of the captains of the Germans in the Pope's guard was wounded to death. Unless an end is made of this matter, the roads will be full of assassins.

6487. HERETICAL BOOKS.

R. O. Wilkins' Concilia, III. 740.

Proclamation, dated June 22 Hen.VIII., against heretical books.

In consequence of the diffusion of a number of pestiferous English books printed in foreign regions, the King has called to him the primates of his realm, and a body of divines of Oxford and Cambridge, desiring their advice and judgment as to the approbation or rejection of suspected publications, and of translations of the Old and New Testament. After full discussion, it has been agreed that the books entitled "The Wicked Mammona," "The Obedience of a Christian Man," "The Supplication of Beggars," "The Revelation of Anti-Christ," "The Summary of Scripture," and others printed beyond sea, contain pestiferous errors and blasphemies. All persons are therefore cautioned, under pain of the King's displeasure, not to buy or receive such books, either in English, or in French, or Dutch. Any person who may possess copies is to bring them within fifteen days to the bishop of his diocese, or the curate or parish priest; and if any person hereafter be known to buy or keep any such works, they are to be brought before the King's council. No person hereafter shall print new books in English concerning Holy Scripture until they have been examined by the ordinary of the diocese, and the name of the examiners shall be printed with the books.

As it is reported that many persons urge the expediency of having the New and Old Testament in the English tongue, the King has referred this subject also to the said divines, who have come to the conclusion that it is not necessary to have the Scriptures in English in the hands of the common people, but that the permission or denial thereof should depend upon the discretion of the superiors; and, considering the malignity of the present time, a translation into English would tend to the increase of error. It is, therefore, more expedient that the people have the Scripture expounded to them by preachers in their sermons as heretofore. If, in future, the people abandon their present perverse opinions, the King intends that the Scripture shall be translated into English by "great learned and Catholic persons." Meanwhile, all translations now in circulation are to be delivered up.

Vit.B.XIII. 91. B. M. Pocock's Burnet, IV. 134.

Today obtained the common seal of the university of Padua. The doctors assembled on Sunday, and the case was disputed all Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and this Friday morning, when they desired a notary to set his hand to an instrument devised by Leonicus and Simonetus in corroboration of the cause. [For] more credence they caused the chancellor of the potestate also to set his seal thereto. Sends copies of everything. The general of the Black Friars has forbidden any Black Friar disputing the Pope's power, but Omnibonus daily procures new subscriptions, and will do so until the brief to the contrary comes to his hands. The Lutherans, of whom there are no small companies both here and at Padua and Ferrara, oppose the King as much as possible.

Doubts not that all Chr[istian] universities, if well handled, will earnestly conclude for the King. Thinks it would be very expedient to obtain their assent in Italy, France, Almayne, Austria, Hungary, and Scotland. Thinks no more can be done from Venice to Rome. The 110 subscriptions which he has procured would have been nothing in comparison with what he would have obtained if he had had money. At this hour has neither provision nor money, and has borrowed 100 cr., which have been spent in getting this seal. Has written several times about his necessities, and has sent divers books and writings, some to Hierome Molyns, a Venetian, factor to Mappheus Bernardus, by Edmond Herwell, and some to Tuke; but he has not heard whether they have been delivered. Has kept copies, and incloses a bill stating by whom and to whom he sent his letters. Asks for help. Venice, 1 July, at night, a° 30.

R. O. Has made search in the city for cloths of baudkin and cloths of gold, and caused Stephen Humble and Thos. Yonge to search also. Finds the city destitute of them, "partly by reason of your late great occupying thereof," partly because they have been much taken up by the King, and partly because the Florentines are more engaged in war than merchandise. "I beseech your Grace, take all this for no delay, for thof I be a priest of small land and promotions, and a poor man daily sustaining great charges by abiding here at Westminster for the King's buildings, and also am at great cost in defending myself in an action of præmunire and other, yet I shall not fail to purvey for your Grace the said cloths, thof I should for the payment thereof lay to pledge and sell all the plate I have. Has written to a friend of his in the city to expedite Wolsey's wish, as it is not in his own power. Adds a little news as to public affairs, not from any desire that the Cardinal should turn his mind to these things from his present devotions, but that he may receive a little pleasure, and Vannes may prolong his letters. The King is in good health, and applies himself to business with his Council. The Emperor's chancellor is dead. It would have have been well if he had died before. Andrea Doria has obtained a victory over Barbarossa's pirates. Hopes that Wolsey will persevere in his present mode of life, and not be agitated by public events, as this is the only means left him of mollifying the temper of the King and the nobles, and preserving their affections. In the cause of England I prosecute my terms; and although we are now on the eve of the holidays, and tomorrow is the last audience, and it will do little good if the Pope do not give us the commission, which I know is already written, his Holiness is sending a man to the King to persuade him either to desist or to submit to judgment. As I could do nothing for three months, I said it appeared to me well. Although, meanwhile, I can but solicit the commission and the cause, I see well that the Pope will excuse himself, saying that he awaits an answer from thence; but since he is so unwilling to commit himself, I have sent notice to the Queen of the state of matters.

R. O. Extract of letters trom D. Gregory (Casale) to Goronus, dated Rome, 22 June.

Since his return to Rome, is diligently occupied in entertaining certain friars, and in the King's business. He highly praises the faith and learning of M. Dionysius, by whose authority much may be hoped for from the others.

He sends a copy of a letter to the bishop of London, showing his (Casale's) diligence in the King's cause. The Pope said he was certain that the King was seeking an opportunity of helping the Florentines, and letters had been intercepted stating that a commission had been despatched for that purpose into England. His Holiness feared that money had already been sent to Florence, and he thought the French king would also favor them through Henry's influence. It appears from the letters of Fras. de Bardis that Henry wishes these matters to be managed with the greatest secresy.

ii. From other letters of the same date.

He has prevailed on the cardinal of Tarbes to pay some learned theologians to write for the King's cause. Some of them say that although our side is the more reasonable, the matter ought to be discussed on both sides. He will take all pains to persuade Fr. Fanarius, a Frenchman, procurator general of the Dominican order, to write for the King, although some think he obtained his dignity by Imperial favor. Cardinal Ægidius seems desirous of pleasing the King, but cannot write for him, as the Pope has commissioned him to write on the matter, which will perhaps come before the College; he promises, however, to speak to Gregory about it from time to time. The Cardinal says that there are only two people in Italy learned in Hebrew, Magister Jacob, and one of those men whom the bishop of London had on his side at Bologna, by Casale's help.

Casale conjectures that although the Pope does not approve of what has hitherto been done by the Imperialists, they will do the same afresh at the first day of judgment. They are alarmed at the number of learned men consulted by the English, and are afraid that on their authority the King will wish to settle the cause in England.

Casale has had very bitter words with the Pope, but, in spite of all his repulses, hopes nothing will be done to the King's prejudice before the vacation, and, if anything is done, that it will be annulled.

6 May.—Other letters to Goronus, of the same tenor, showing his fidelity to the King.

3 July.—On public matters. The Pope, by advice of Ascanius Colonna, has made war on the abbot of Farfa, to little profit or honor. Hopes it will not be to the loss of the court, as he is occupied with another war against the Florentines, which Casale fears will last longer than desirable, as they have bread enough, and more is brought to them every day. The marquis of Guasto, who went to Naples to settle his business there before setting out as Ferdinand's general against the Turks, says that the sally of Stefano Colonna was very gallant, both on his side and that of the Germans.

He left Florence with 1,500 men in three bands, the centre a little beyond the others, and bearing red crosses. Having discovered the watchword of the Germans, they went straight into the camp by the rear, without the Germans knowing it, but he could not keep his men from plundering and slaying while waiting for the other two bands; and the Germans, half asleep, collected into a body and fought bravely, suffering a greater loss than the Italians.

6500. [CROKE to HENRY VIII.]

Vit. B.XIII.93. B.M.

Asks his favor, for it is solely by his diligence and faithful conveyance that the King has obtained the subscriptions of 100 divines, besides c[ensura] collegii theologorum Patavinorum under their common seal, of which [he sends] a copy. The bishop of London will show the King what trouble he had to obtain it.

Has followed the Bishop's advice in all points. Has not hindered the pros[perity] of the King's cause, either by passion or by envy, as his Highness writes. Refused to communicate with the ambassador, because his instructions were to communicate only with the bishop of Worcester, and because those things to which he was privy utterly miscarried. Doubts not that the King now knows the truth from father Francis and prior Thomas; but, better to show his own innocence and the Cassali's cloaked infidelity, sends copies of three letters: the first, from Sir Gregory to his brother, showing how he, to the detriment of the King's cause, "embec[illed from] your ambassador and me the determinations of the universiti[es in] England;" the second showing that the ambassador tried to "embecyll" all father Francis' labors; and the third proving what he has before written to[uching] the cause why he dare not communicate with him.

Many who procured anything in the King's cause have been threatened [as well] by the Imperial ambassador as divers senators of Venice. Some have been cited before the Duke. If the King's letters [had not] prevented the fury of the Signory, they would have been utterly undone. Asks whether he now thinks feigned fear made him ask for letters to the [Senate that] every man might speak his mind.

R. O.

This morning the Emperor's ambassador and many Spanish gentlemen came into prior Thomas' cell, where Croke was lodged. He asked the prior how he durst meddle in so great and weighty a matter, which not only "did enlessen [the King's?] and elevate the Pope's authority," but was odious to all Christian realms, alleging the great love of the nobles and commons of England for the Queen, for her virtues. He said also that if this conclusion took effect, many of the greatest princes would be disinherited and taken for bastards, including the Emperor and the king of Portugal. He replied that he wrote his conclusion according to the minds of holy saints and doctors, and that he was ignorant of its being the King's cause. The ambassador said that was impossible, for he had in his purse the Prior's letter to the King, promising to defend his cause; but he did not show it. If he has not the letter, cannot see how he can have heard of it but from England. If he has it, fears that many other things have miscarried, the danger of which might have been avoided, if advice had been sent to Croke these four months.

Gave his letters directed to Tuke, either to the master of the posts at Venice, with money for their safe conveyance, or to Edmund Harwel to be sent by the Belgers in Flanders to Jerome Molyns, their correspondent factor, for Mapheus Bernardi of Venice. Conjectures that the Emperor's ambassador has the conclusion which friar Thomas delivered to John Cassale. Has Gregory's letter in his own hand, confessing that he "embecilled" the seal of the universities of England, of which he encloses a copy. Asks for money and advice. If he has not provision beforehand, cannot maintain his diligence in the King's cause. In the barge, in post from Padua to Venice, 4 July.

R. O. P.S. on a separate slip.—After closing this letter, the ambassador Cassale showed him letters from England, and said that he had heard from Grony his servant that the King spoke to him words of challenge against both Sir Gregory and himself, and that he commanded the duke of Norfolk to charge Grony to make no advice of the King's words to them. By the advice of those about the King, Croke and his fellows are in great danger, and the King's causes much hindered. The bishop of London is in no less danger.

Add. MS. 28,580, f. 218. B. M. Is writing to the Emperor by way of England. Requests him to provide at Rome that his Holiness may accept two commissary judges for the Queen's cause, because, as the ambassador has written to me, they have concluded against God, the Church and your Majesty. For our part, we have so many votes, that with the four we might win all the others (?); and your Majesty has the better occasion to pursue the right, because every man of learning and good life is on the side of truth. Before the plea is put forward that Katharine is the Emperor's subject (antes que muden proposito que es su natural), it is necessary to take great care that the king of England do not presume to carry the divorce of his own mere will against the Pope's inclination. Thinks, therefore, it is more important now than ever that the Pope should insist on Henry living with his Queen; for the conclusion taken here will commit him to hell, it has been done in so corrupt and violent a manner. Sends the names to the Emperor, that all the world may know them, and especially the Pope. The inventors

But they cannot find with their learning that the law will bear us out in our causes concerning your college, as you had incurred the præmunire before its erection, and the same is so found by the King's council. They find that the lands of your colleges were granted unto your Grace and your heirs in fee simple for ever; and, by reason of the præmunire, have reverted to their first nature, with all the circuit of the late priory of St. Peter's, on which the college was founded. The Council have made books to find offices upon all the premises, and we have no remedy except to petition the King; which we have done, but with little comfort. We have found my lord of Norfolk as favorable to us as we could have desired; and if the law would have borne us out, he would have stuck fast to us like a friend. The suit is chargeable, and our rents are detained. Some of my plate is at pledge, and some I have sold, and am "at a great after-deal." When the commons and charges of the college are paid, my payments will exceed the receipts; and if the King take from us the rents due at Michaelmas, unless you are gracious lord unto me, I am undone. I cannot but perceive the King intends to take all the said rents to his own use. London, 9 July. Signed.

R. O. Has written twice on his journey hither,—first from Mechlin on the 22nd ult., and again from Cologne on the 27th. The latter he delivered to Sir Harman Rynge, addressed to the King's ambassador with the Lady Margaret. Mentioned a league said to have been taken with the Turk, and an appointment between Don Fernando and Vyvalde (the Waywode), but hears no word of it. Arrived at Augsburg on Friday the 8th; was conducted to the Emperor in his bed-chamber the second day after, who, when he had declared the first part of his charge, answered, without alluding to the King's great cause, that the ambassador should be always welcome. Next day visited the king of Hungary, and delivered the King's letter to him; at which he seemed greatly rejoiced, and said he should be always glad to hear of the King's convalescence.

A great diet is here assembled. The bishop of Trere and the Count Palatine Ludovic only are absent from illness, but have given a general consent to all that shall be done by the Emperor and the Electors. Daily Councils are held about the Lutherans, but hitherto with little effect, though the Cardinal of Luke, with whom he supped last night, thinks the heads of that sect incline to the Emperor's mind. Word has come that the town and camp of Florence are infected with the plague, and that the Emperor is in doubt of the prince of Orange, his chief captain there. Some think the Emperor has been quite as much a scourge as a friend to the Pope in that enterprise. Sends a letter from duke George of Saxony in answer to the King's letter sent by the writer. Osbourghe, in the county of Swethin, 11 July 1530.

Vit.B.XIII.94. B. M. Has received his letters, to his high [displeasure,] because he sees that Tuke wrongly thinks that he blamed him to the King. If he had intended to do this, or had not singular trust in his friendship, would not have made instant suit to the King to trust only Tuke or Foxe with the secret part of his letters. It seems that Tuke will charge him "with an . . . . . of my preparations the which the King gave me," and that he says that Croke received from Antony Bonvyse 90*l.* Has never received anything from him, except 200 ducats de largo today, 13 July, anno xxii, "for all other money a[mounting] to 1,000 ducats, besides that that I received at my d[eparture] . . . . . uyd of my lord of Worcester, and by his order," as appears by the account sent to Tuke, and sent also to the King in the bishop of London's packet, which doubtless the King has given to Tuke. Yet he pretends that he has no reckoning from Croke, and leaves him utterly destitute of his diets, so that he has been fain to [borrow], and the money is spent before it comes. "Ye sent by the order of Bonvyse to my lord . . . . for 80*l.* and 4*l.* my rate of my diets for three months, bu[t] . . . . as my lord Worcester sent me word by his letters sending . . . . . his writing in that behalf Bonvix own letter unto me by . . . ., so that ye never sent to me 90*l.*" Reminds him of his poverty, and the necessity of money for the King's causes. Was in debt 200 cr. before this 200 duc[ats arrived]. His diets expired on May 27. Asks him to consider that 48 days of his new diets were pa[ssed when the] ducats came; the parcels laid out, and his poverty. "Surely if . . . . . the instance of my lord of London had * * * diets as for my charges in the King's business, which, if ye do not the shortlier, there is no remedy but I must needs come home, and that a-begging." Since the return of the bishop of London from Padua, has endeavored to learn what he did there. Although the Signory has always informed me that it was without effect, I knew that he had convoked some friars, who, in the name of a college of divines, had given a determination in favor of the king of England against the power of the Pope. Having ascertained this I went to the college, and told the Prince before his Council of Ten, wondering greatly that such a thing should have been done after the assurance given me to the contrary. They stood amazed, and said they were not aware that there was a college of divines at Padua, and that if any friar had given an opinion in it, it was a thing of little moment. I certified them that the thing was so, and that it was of serious weight, because I had written to your Majesty how determined they were that no opinion should issue from their university of Padua that would touch the authority of the Church. They replied they could not believe it; but they sent to Padua, and expressed great regret on finding my information was true. They sent for one of the friars, and made him produce a copy of the opinion given to the bishop of London, with the names of all who were concerned in it. Sends another copy to the Emperor, and will send one to Mai to show the Pope. Is angry beyond measure with the Signory for this remissness. Hears the king of England's agents have obtained more than 150 signatures. Wonders they are not 100,000; for those that they cannot obtain by promises they do by threats, and all their proceedings are secret. The general of the Augustines, who, as the Emperor knows, is here, has been importuned to declare in favor of the King. He excused himself on the ground of business; but they pressed him so hard, that he told them he would not put his hand to a matter of so great scandal, so injurious to the Church, and to persons so nearly allied to the Emperor as the queen of England and the king of Portugal; for the father of the latter, Don Manuel, had dispensation in the same degree. They then told him that the monasteries of his Order in England had declared for the King, and that they would suffer for him what they would not on their own account. He told them that they might do what they liked with the monasteries. They told him also that he knew it was the intention of the king of England, when he had got the opinions of the learned, if the Pope refused to annul (dar por ninguna) the dispensation, to marry in fact the lady he meant to marry, and put the Queen in a castle where no one should see her. All this the General has told me in great secresy.

The Signory would have sent orders to the friars to unsay what they have written against the power of the Pope, if I had only asked them; but I did not wish to do it without instructions, and perhaps it is better not to attribute too much weight to their opinions. Venice, 13 July 1530.

R. O. St. P. VII. 247.

Has received by his ambassador his letter, written in June, from Hampton Court. Cannot express his satisfaction at Henry's good will towards himself, and the spirit in which he takes his friendly monition of the evil rumors in Germany. Rejoices all the more at the King's vindication, showing he was influenced, not by self-interest, but only by the fear of God. Is sure Henry would attempt nothing for which he could not give a satisfactory reason, but wishes he had never been led to this. Doubts not there are many good and learned men in England, who, to take away the King's scruples, can show that his marriage requires no further legalization. Has not spoken with the ambassador today, partly on account of the business of the diet, partly for want of an interpreter, as he cannot understand English, and should like to talk with him confidentially. Your Majesty may well suppose that if the king of England knew that a General Council was to be held, he would wait a year or two without proceeding in the cause, in the hope that a constitution would be made in his favor, such as that which he demanded of the Pope a year ago, and they would not consent to any other conclusion. Thinks, nevertheless, it would be on the whole advantageous, if the cause cannot be gained by practices, to treat of a national council, and possibly the Germans would come to it more readily, especially those here. * * *

Add. MS. 28,580, f. 279. B. M.

On receipt of the Emperor's commands touching the English divorce, communicated with the imperial lawyers and the cardinal of Osma, when it was agreed on all hands that it was best to prosecute such terms as they could (seguir los terminos que podriamos), that the king of England might not suppose the game would be given up; and, on the other hand, that they should tell the Pope they would do whatever he commanded. I accordingly communicated to him what your Majesty commanded to be written, that meanwhile they should not seek votes. The brief which his Holiness has since given will prevent the universities giving opinions collegialmente. It appeared to him that it was not well to prevent them and us seeking opinions individually. The King is meanwhile debarred from proceeding de facto by the same litis pendentia, and since by the brief; and it would be unadvisable to exhibit suspicion, especially as we are informed here that though the King did not wish to incur it, the fear of scandal would not deter him. This the Pope has confessed to us, and Gregory Casale also to me.

Meanwhile he ought to separate from that other woman, and live in matrimony with the Queen. He remains still, however, under the prohibition, and then we concede to him nothing but the holidays, which they would gain in any case. It is not thought expedient to urge him: but the Pope agrees, and the Cardinal approves, that he should admonish him to separate meanwhile from her on account of the scandal of this intercourse, especially as he professes such anxiety to pacify his conscience, which people will believe more readily if he so abstain.

As I wrote to your Majesty, the Pope is sending thither as nuncio the baron del Bario (Burjo), who served your Majesty in Sicily at the time of the revolt. Thinks, since the Pope agrees to it, he will do good service in the matter of England, and he goes with no other wish than to shake the King in his purpose; with which view he carries thither instructions entirely persuasive to this effect. He has told me he is very glad of this opportunity of serving your Majesty, and clearing himself of suspicion. I gave him occasion to exculpate himself, which he was very glad to do. Has no doubt of his sincerity.

I have procured that he take with him the dispensation obtained by the king of England to marry his present Queen, notwithstanding that she was his brother's wife. He says, if nothing else will avail, he can use this as a last resource.

As we are now entering the holidays, I have besought the Pope to give me a commission to proceed in the matter, notwithstanding them; which he has refused. I am told by the bishop of Castellomar that there were in the signatura some votes for proceeding further; and they desired that in a case so important they should not proceed por contradictas, as they say here, or, as they say in Castile, por contumacia de la parte. You may be assured they leave nothing undone to attempt it.

Some further account of what he has done about the terms which the auditor revoked, and which the English ambassadors endeavored to get him to renounce. * * *

The bishop of London has been at Venice, Padua and Vicenza, and is now returning to Bologna. The Pope has learned on good authority from this Bishop that the King wishes to dissuade this judgment if he could; and if he cannot, he will not fail to appear and defend the cause, otherwise he is sure to lose it. Rome, 15 July 1530.

The nuncio in France has written that the French king has told him that the king of England complained of the Pope; and that if they pressed him too hard, he would marry, and his kingdom renounce obedience to the Apostolic See, and that in a few days the whole kingdom of England would write to the Pope about it. The nuncio made a good reply. This, however, will profit little, because the brief has already been drawn up more than a month ago, and the Pope keeps it in his purse, and I cannot succeed in getting it out of him.

Some days ago I wrote that another brief had been issued, that no one give an opinion on this cause except according to truth and conscience. Discussion about it with the Cardinal St. Quatuor. Has letters from Rodrigo Niño, dated the 11th July, stating that the bishop of London has been traversing those lands, and finally in Padua he gained 11 votes from as many friars, for 10 ducats. Most of them are quite illiterate, and men of bad lives.

R. O. Since my last letters by Dr. Marchall's servant, after long suit made to my lord of Norfolk, we learned from him on the 19th that the King is resolved that our college shall be dissolved, and left to his use, against Michaelmas next. The lands have been seized to the King's use, and books of offices prepared. What the King will do with the college I cannot tell. Dr. Stephens has spoken in its behalf, but the King will not hear him. The commissioners have taken an inventory of the books, ornaments, &c.; so that I dare not send your Grace the chapel books. The King will dispose of the children of the chapel at his pleasure. This day I repaired to Hampshire, to commune with Dr. Incent of the benefice he gave me near Hampton (Southampton). I shall then return to Ipswich, and remain there until I am discharged. Dr. Fox is come home. London, 20 July. Signed.

It is expected this will occasion a breach; but M. La Geshe told me today, in great confidence, that he was commissioned to go to the Emperor. Here is still great hatred between the Great Master and the Admiral. The French ladies mock the Spanish, and the Spanish ladies spy well. It is feared the Queen will not long agree with the French king's mother. Many favor the former out of spite to the latter. The Florentines seek aid for their town, but it is thought Francis will not meddle. Has just heard Robert d'Angy goes instead of La Geshe.* Has received, for the discharge of the flower de luce, the obligation of Henry VII. to redeliver it to Maximilian, which De Pratt and Gylam de la Barrys have endorsed with the date of its receipt. the Queen; my Lady rode with her in the litter; the King's children before. The Queen was well received for such a town. The King intends to go to Paris by Cognac. He will probably arrive about Michaelmas, and the greatest triumph will probably be made in honor of the Queen and of the children. Must have money to buy apparel if he remains. The abbot of Farfa is gone over to cardinal Colonna, and married his niece. Thus the houses of Colonna and Ursine are united, and make skirmishes daily against the Pope, who has withdrawn into Castle Angelo and is sick, or pretends to be. The marquis of Guaste has abandoned the siege of Florence, and it is said he will be the Emperor's chief captain against the Turk. 200 or 300 men die daily in the camp. The Pope's army has gone from Voltier to the siege of Florence, to supply the place of those dead of the plague, so that the city is likely to be better victualled. Reports a conversation he had with the English ambassador on the 14th, about the divorce. The ambassador told him that they had mentioned to the bishop of London that Niño had gone to Padua to get the determination of the eleven Friars revoked, and that he had gone to my lodging to ascertain if I were there. I replied that, considering what sort of persons they were, I should certainly not go to Padua, nor should I take any trouble in such a case, unless I knew that their authority was sufficient to weigh against others, as they had been influenced by the promises of the Bishop and Ricaldo (Croke). He said, moreover, they had told the Bishop that I had been counterworking them in this, not only with the doctors and friars, but with the Signory, without any commission from the Emperor. This I said was quite true, because it was not for your Majesty to treat of this matter with Jews and foolish friars; but if they would negociate in a manner worthy of the king of England, your Majesty would doubtless command your ambassadors to treat in your name. He said the Bishop had informed the King of my conduct; and I replied, he could not have done me a greater kindness than to place me in a position in which I could do service to a daughter of queen Isabella; for I believed not only the men, but the very stones of all Castile, would rise to resent the injury they meant to do this Queen, and that I trusted the King himself would punish them for the unworthy service they did him, in seeking the opinions of friars who could not read, and not sending those of the many learned men who had given a contrary opinion. He said I was right; but begged me, for the love of God, to keep it secret, or the King would put him and his brother to death, both for this and what passed between us on Ascension Day. Moreover, he told me they had word from Rome that certain acts had been done in the Rota on behalf of the Queen, and that the bishop of London had a suspicion that I had a power from the Queen to do other acts with the Signory. I told him I did not know about those at Rome, and that there was no act to be done on the Queen's behalf here, as it did not lie with the Signory to judge the cause. With this we came to the condition with which the friars had qualified their opinion, viz., that the Pope had no power to dispense, if the marriage with the King's brother had been consummated. And since the Queen had declared to Campeggio, in the sacrament of confession, that this was not the case, the King knew better than anybody "que que mas andavan a buscar." The English ambassador said this was true, but the King intended to prove that it must be otherwise, because they had several times been in the same bed. Disputed this inference.

On the 18th, the bishop of London, and the English ambassador here resident, and Ricaldo, were with the college; and Niño, who was present at their arrival, gave them an account beforehand of his communication with the English ambassador. They waited some time for his departure, and on entering gave the Signory a letter of credence for all three from the king of England. The Bishop made a great oration, declaring how the King solicited the opinion of the university of Padua from his esteemed friends and confederates. The Signory replied that the same request had been made to them eight times by the present ambassador, and that they had answered that it was a matter with which the Signory did not wish to meddle, as it concerned the authority of the Church, and persons nearly related to the Emperor, but if their doctors wished to study the matter they might take their opinion. The Bishop said they had already applied to the doctors, but found they had been prohibited by the Signory from complying with the king of England's wish. This led to some discussion, in which the English used threatening language, and reproached them with allowing the Emperor's ambassador to do, without a commission, that which they forbad the English to do, though fully authorised to ask it. The above information was communicated to me the other day by the college, when I gave them thanks on behalf of your Majesty for their firmness in not commanding their doctors to make a determination. I told him I believed the king of England wished to know the truth, because nothing else could be supposed of such a Prince, but the method taken by his agents was only to know the contrary. Added many other arguments. The Signory promised to remain firm, and to take measures accordingly at Padua. To confirm them in this, I said I would give them two cases of marriage here at Venice,—the one like that of the king of England, the other like that of the king of Portugal. I told them the names, and they said I was right. The man who married two sisters is alive, and has sons by both; and the man who married with the wife of his brother died at the siege of Naples with Lautrec. * * *

28 July. 6531. [CROKE] to HENRY VIII.

Vit. B. XIII. 95. B. M.

There was never break in word or countenance b[etween] Croke and any of the King's ambassadors here; and he never took displeasure at anything done by them, unless it were prejudicial to the King with manifest proof of perfidy, as the King must know by letters in the trespasser's own hand, and others sent to him by Croke. Never signified to the tres[passer] that he had any knowledge thereof, but secretly informed the King, hoping to have a remedy from him. As the King, notwithstanding Croke's manifest proofs, imputes the information he sends to his forward manners and envy, and considers that he has done much to hinder his cause, "therefore commandeth me, by your said letters, to impute t . . . . . the lets and impediments of your said causes, nor yet wo . . . . . I should ascertain your Highness, by whose diligence, labor, a[nd] travail your said causes be here preferred, I wot not h[ow] to remedy such mischiefs as daily increaseth here a[mong] your Highness's favorers, nor to avoid such impediments [as] by craft are imagined, to the hindrance of your mo[st] honorable cause, by them whose affectionate report unt[o] . . . . . avoucheth to be unto your Highness singular faithful . . . . . profitable. Nor yet how to comfort them the which for" * * * And, further, they refuse to inform secretly those whom they have openly "dishorted" and put in fear that they will be indifferent. The Senate would not give secretly fides publica to the ambassadors that they would not injure those who had written or should write in the King's favor, though the bishop of London offered to promise that it should not be disclosed, nor could he induce them to grant the request by letters to the King. There is, therefore, no hope of further preferment of the King's cause. As to Sir Gregory's good hope of the brief, the bishop of Worcester despairs of it. Mr. Cranmer writes from Rome, on 12 July, that their success is but small; that they dare not try to find out any man's mind, because of the Pope, who is not content with what Croke has already done, for he says no friars shall discuss his power. He looks for no favor in the Court, but for opposition from the Pope and all his cardinals.

On the same day Mr. Gregory's letter to his brother was written; and if the brief is obtained, of which he pretends to have sure hope, doubts not that the King now has it, though it would have been much better to have sent it hither. Hopes that this interchangeable sending of each other's letters to the King is not only to preoccupy his favor, without any preferment to his cause. Beseeches him to help his endeavors, as he prosecutes his cause with all faith and diligence and no little danger, as the ambassador is informed of what he writes to the King, "as appeareth [by cert]ayne expostulations with me for every one of the said things." * * * Although the King acknowledges the receipt of the letter, Tuke denies the receipt of the account, and pretends that what Croke has spent remains in his hand, and that he is therefore provisioned for four months beforehand. Has not truly provision for one day. On 13 July, Tuke sent him a bill of exchange for 200 ducats de largo. The imperial ambassador is making great efforts against the King. There is so much fear of the Pope and the Emperor, that the King's cause never wanted so much money. Venice, 28 July.

6532. [CROKE] to TUKE.

The King's causes never needed so much money as now. Has sent his reckoning so often that he doubts not it has come to his hands. If it is intercepted, the King had better have lost 1,000*l.*

Dares not send any more declarations of parcels, but he assures Tuke that he has laid out for the King above 500 cr. Has neither diets nor money to help himself, by Tuke's provision. But for the bishop of London, would have been forced to take his journey homeward directly he received Tuke's letters. Tuke will see by the enclosed copy of a letter what hope there is from the bishop of Worcester.

Is sorry that Tuke is causelessly displeased with him. Venice, 28 July.

Add. MSS. 28,580, f. 308. B. M.

Last Sunday the bishop of London, with the resident English ambassador and Richard, were with the College to demand an answer to the king of England's letter. The Signory replied that they had conferred with their Council of Ten and with the Pregadi as usual, and that there was no one but desired to gratify the king of England; but they all thought, as it was a matter very scandalous and against the authority of the Holy See, and injurious to the Emperor, who was so nearly allied to the queen of England, and affected also the king of Portugal and the Empress, that they ought not to meddle with it, or give any order to their doctors at Padua. With this reply the Bishop and his colleagues expressed so much dissatisfaction that a long discussion arose, which would have lasted the whole day but that the Signory determined to rise; and words of menace were not wanting on the part of the English, nor good men on the part of the College, to give them an answer which they did not wish to hear. At last the Bishop declared he would not take this as their final reply, but begged them to think well over the matter, and consider that they had no right to be offended when the King only wished to know the truth. Yesterday the Bishop and his fellows returned to the College, where substantially the same thing was repeated, as I was informed by the Signory today, when I visited the College myself for other matters. Nor would the Bishop leave them without a further request that they would consider the cause, declaring that he would return another time. They have all promised me, however, that they will stand firm, even if the King of England should come himself to ask them. Your Majesty is aware that the English are much ashamed of the opinions they got at Padua from these friars. * * * Venice, 28 July 1530.

The bishop of London has got eleven friars at Padua, not very well qualified either by learning or religion, to give an opinion, in the name of the university, that the Pope could not dispense in the matter of the king of England. This may have some effect upon the ill-disposed.† Alberto de Carpi and the Nuncio write from Paris to the Pope and me, that Garay, although he beseeches the Pope to send thither a commissary to punish them, has no remedy, and that the Pope has kept in his purse for two months the brief he promised to issue that the universities should give no opinion as such. 6543. CRANMER to CROKE.

Records of the Reformation, i. 409.

The Pope has granted them no brief after their device, whatever Mr. Gregory has written; but he asked them to devise a brief, which he would sign, if he liked it. But when it was devised, faults were found in it, and it was given to card. St. Quatuor to amend, who "clean marred it." Since then have had many new devised and changed; but whenever the Pope has granted anything, the Imperial ambassador has made such exclamations that all was changed. Never knew such inconstancy. Supposes they will obtain nothing while the Cardinal, who is their utter adversary, bears authority. However, the Pope is contented, and Cranmer supposes they will have one tolerably good brief, but not as they would wish.

Supposes father Francis will be faithful; but, according to Croke's advice, will get as much from him, and tell him as little as possible, until he sees that he will stiffly defend their cause with the Pope. Hitherto he has kept himself indifferent, and, when talking with the Pope, has made reasons for both parties, but affirmed neither, that the Pope might not suspect him of favoring the King. He says that if he acted otherwise the Pope would tell him nothing, and give him no credence, and he may thus discover the mind both of the Pope and the adversaries. Approves of this course. Doubts not he will do whatever the bishop of London thinks best. He has been ill for a fortnight, but is now recovered.

6544. WILL. POULET to WOLSEY.

I am glad you are pleased with the demeanor of the prior and convent of your cathedral of St. Swithin's, and that you so much desire to visit them, if it might stand with the King's pleasure. They have had much trouble about these patents, though there is no help when they have passed your seal. This you will see yourself, "for you can have no rest till you have performed like suits." Could not inform Wolsey of the two new clauses in my lord of Norfolk's patent, as neither that nor any other patent came to his hands. The mastership of your game was given by my late lord of Winchester to my Lord Chamberlain. Thinks Wolsey is not entitled to grant the manrede of his tenants, and the leading of them in musters, which belongs to the King alone. States reasons. Will be glad to lend Wolsey 100*l.*, as he promised him at the Charterhouse beside Richmond, but cannot do it at one time. Sends 40*l.* by the bearer, John Flemmyng, and will make what speed he can with the rest, considering Wolsey's necessities. 6545. THOMAS RUNCORN, Priest, to WOLSEY.

I have spoken to Master Secretary (Gardiner), and given him thanks for his faithful love to you, shown by the humanity he displayed to my master, and also by that the King did so graciously receive him, and wrote in his favor to you, beseeching him to persevere in his goodness to you both, and declaring that, whatsoever was thought or spoken by other men, your Grace specially trusted in him above all men. I told him the great necessity your Grace was in, and begged him to solicit the King, out of respect to the service your Grace had done him, that he would, out of consideration for your former and present estate, look upon you with charity, and relieve you from this miserable poverty. I showed him that the 1,000 marks, had for your journey to the North, were spent in paying your debts previous to leaving London, and you had not more than 100*l.*, so that you have been obliged to borrow for the support of yourself and your household; that as for the magnificent buildings you were accused of making, they are nothing but the stopping of holes where it rained in from the windows, doors, &c., and had been paid by your receiver at Southwell out of his own money. "Nor I forgat not to remember how that he, and only he, was privy how, and with what hope and trust," you committed yourself and all you had to the King. I moved him touching your colleges, showing how much they stuck in your thoughts, prosecuting the effect of your letters written to him therein. He answered that he was perfectly willing to accomplish whatever should be most to your interest and pleasure; that though he had such favor with the King that he might come to his speech at all times, yet he had not such a trade, "such was his English, that he might in all causes deduce his Grace to his purpose." Secondly, he said that if you had not sufficient to live withal, it was your own fault, for you might have taken sufficient, but you would not do so, "so that the show might be the greater when it should be presented to the King's sight; nor did ye not confess all your debts, but concealed very much, so that the King hath paid four times double more than was thought he should." If he were to move the King, he thinks he would give offence. The King, he says, is minded to erect in Oxford a college as honorable as any there, but the foundation shall be changed; so you will perceive that his mind is bent on the increase of virtue and learning. I shall repair to you at Michaelmas. London, 1 Aug.

6550. MAI to CHARLES V.

Has received the names of the lawyers who voted at Paris against the queen of England. Their conclusion does no harm, because they say the Pope could not dispense in this case "for a reasonable cause;" whereas the cause for which pope Julius dispensed was most urgent, as declared in the brief itself. Moreover, there ought to be two thirds of one opinion against the other third, according to the Statute of Paris; and their votes are only six or eight more than ours. Thinks, if the cause be heard at Rome, all their diligence will be thrown away. Dr. Benet told me the other day at chapel, that the Baron (de Burjo) was going in order to arrange that the matter be examined in an indifferent place. I complained to the Pope of this, and he denied it. Nevertheless I told him that your Majesty was determined to consent to no place but Rome, or wherever his Holiness should be. Rome, 4 Aug. 1530.

6551. [CROKE to HENRY VIII.]

On July 30 the ambassadors went again to the Senate to ask for an answer to the King's letters. First, the bishop of London propounded to them the cause of his coming, and asked them whether they would alter their letters to the King, which had been read to the ambassadors the Wednesday before, and which contained no direct answer. To this the Duke's deputy answered very gently, that they would do what they could to please the King, but in this case, "for respects of princes," they would not intermeddle, but remain neutral. The Bishop replied that that was no direct answer, and showed them that if their neutrality prevented their subjects from giving their opinions, it would be very prejudicial to the King, as every learned man must in his conscience favor his cause, if he had liberty to speak; and he therefore desired them to answer the King's requests directly either by mouth or letters, saying that they would either grant or deny the said licence. Gives the Bishop's words in Latin. Aloysius Mocenicus replied that the Bishop passed his commission, and unless he had another commission than that he had when presenting the King's letters, it became him to be content with this answer; it was enough for him to deliver the King's letters, for his Highness desired no such answer as he had requested. "[The] said Aloysius Mocenicus, besides many other checks and injuries [done unto my said] Lord, avaunted himself to have known what belonged to . . . . . Lord, and that he had been ambassador to . . . . . Against the which letters my said Lord made instance, c[ontending that] they promised nothing certain unto your Highness, wherefore Aloysius Moce[nicus] opprobriously desired my Lord to answer him laconice to this demand:" If the Emperor were to declare war against the king of England, and either party wrote to them, saying that he did not ask for money, but wished them to supply soldiers for his money, what should they do? Should they tell their soldiers to go? The Bishop replied that this was a different case, for the cause was not to be decided by force and the sword, but by justice, and therefore it was impious and unchristian to prevent their subjects taking part; besides, he did not wish them to tell their subjects to give advice, but only to allow them to do so. At this they were silent, but Mocenicus said that he was sure that the King, who was superior to the Bishop, would be content with their answer, and therefore it became the Bishop also to be content. At this Croke took upon himself to say that he was sure their answer was neither sufficient nor yet a direct answer to the King's letter,—which requests, if they will not grant what he asks, an absolute refusal, to prevent the wasting of time by false hopes; and therefore the Bishop did not pass his commission in asking for a plain yea or nay. Though they say that they have written more expressly to their ambassador in order to avoid making any promise, that can be no security for the King, nor discharge for his ambassadors, as "they m[ay at their] pleasure go from all the promises of the * * * should justly be made against them, that their orators would not exhibit their said letters unto him, nor durst not against them."

On this the Senate asked them to admit the letters that were devised and read before them; which the Bishop refused, saying that he could not do so without showing himself foolish in admitting an answer which was not to the effect; and he required them, if they would not expressly comprise in their letter the answer he desired, that they would give him there a sufficient and direct answer.

As he could get nothing from them but volumus esse neutrales and responsum est, and saw that they ever made more cavillations, he asked for an answer in one of these three ways,—volumus concedere, nolumus concedere, or nolumus respondere; at which words all were silent, except Mocenicus, who said that such answers ought to be made in schools and not in senates. Departed, telling them that the King would not be contented with such an answer. Hears that they immediately despatched a courier into England with their answer and excuse. Will do whatever the King wishes about it. * * (A leaf or more lost.) * *

"durst not publish themself) by other men published without daung[er] unto themself." Their mind was that all their su[bjects] should know that they did not wish them to meddle in the King's cause. This was why they opened their answer in consilio rogatorum, where above 300 persons are assembled, so that a tale there told is forthwith spread throughout all their dominion. To show to all the world that they refused the King's requests, immediately after the Council they restrained for a season their galleys, which were ready to go to England and Flanders; so that although in words they pretended neutrality, they have really more slandered and rid the King's desire, than if they had given an open prohibition. After the Council there was a constant rumor that "your High[ness' request] was" that the Signory should order the college of lawyers at Pa[dua] to determine in favor of the cause.

The day that the bishop of London left the Senate, Saturday, 30 July, he planned "with your [ambassador]" that they and Croke should on the morrow after go to the Senate to obtain some exposition of their neutrality; but the ambassador would not go. Then the Bishop and the [ambassador] agreed that he and Croke should go on Monday, but he sent an excuse. On Tuesday he went much earlier than usual, without Croke's knowledge. Followed immediately, but could not get even into the outer chamber, from which no man is lightly excluded, and from which Croke was never excluded before. On his return, he repeated to Stokesley and Croke many comfortable words which were spoken in the King's favor by the Senate, and such as never had been spoken to them. Did not think they had any color of truth, and now the contrary is evident. "Now to ascertain your Highness, as my faith bindeth me, of th . . . . . intent of your secret enemies. The bishop Theatinus is * * * shameth not to glory that he was desired by your said Highness to subscribe or write in the favor of your said cause." He also exhorts every one to beware of meddling in this cause, saying that he fears that those who take the King's part will repent too late. He desires every one with whom he talks to keep his counsel, as he does not wish to be known as taking the contrary part, but as indifferent. All this comes from ambition, as he believes that if he flatters the Emperor and the Pope, he will be one of those appointed to consider the matter by the Pope. He cannot, however, except to his own reproach, slander either the King's intent or the handling of his cause; for he was asked his opinion, and told that the King would as thankfully take an adverse judgment, if in accordance with his learning and conscience. His answer was as Croke has already written. Never proposed the King's case to any man, either when he proposed it as a private case, or in the King's name, in any other fashion, feeling certain that "if they that maintained the contrary would come to reason or authority, they should never be able evenly to match any man that with a mean wit had any sight in learning." Never entreated any man to favor the cause, and never gave or promised anything till after they had written or subscribed; or of their own cost, without being desired by Croke, had sent messengers abroad into the country, to cause other men to subscribe in corroboration of their opinion. Complains that although he has sent his account of money spent, Tuke denies having received it, and, counting what he has spent as still remaining in his hands, sends him only 200 ducats de largo in full payment of his diets for four months. Has been obliged to borrow or beg. Reminds the King of his poverty. Venice, 5 Aug.

And in case be that the same letters patents be demynute, or, by reason of the date or otherwise, in any part insufficient, as I trust in God they be not, upon my knees I shall most heartily beseech you, for the old amity that hath been betwixt us, to do the best that ye can with the King's [highness and his] most honorable and learned counsel, that the same may be newly in effectual manner amended and reformed, so as I may at all times hereafter quietly use, enjoy, and perceive the profits and commodities of my said archbishopric, both spiritual and temporal, without contradiction, stop, let, or vexation." This will be a great obligation, and Wolsey will give him cause to think that his pain is not ill bestowed, as the bearer, Mr. Elys, Wolsey's chaplain, will show more at large.

was to forbid the faculty from giving an opinion, and, moreover, that as the terms of the brief required procedure according to canon or other law, it excluded the theologians. By a constant importunity they got the Pope to assent to a declaration thereupon, which as it did not appear good to the Queen's lawyers or to me, we made another, which they reformed again, and, although it is not as we desired, we think it may be suffered.

They will not yet give me the brief they promised that the universities should not pronounce an opinion on this cause, but I will solicit it in spite of the excuses St. Quatuor is continually making. He excuses himself by what I myself said in our justification, that your Majesty alone has more universities than all the rest of the world. As to giving a cardinal's hat to the auditor of the Chamber, is told that the Pope has replied that he wishes to know the will of the king of England. If so, I hold him to be a cardinal as much as Tarbes, especially as the office of auditor which he vacates is such that the Pope may sell or give it to any one he pleases. Begs the Emperor to write a word advising the Pope to create such persons cardinals as are well affected to the authority of the Holy See. Philip Decio has given an opinion that pope Julius was competent to dispense with reason; but the reason he put forward is not good. Repeats a request he has already several times made, that the acts be sent hither relating both to the first and second marriage. The Chancellor says that Granvelle has not got them. Begs that the Emperor will have them sent hither, for in 40 days the holidays will be over. * * * Rome, 10 Aug. 1530.

6558. HENRY CARBOTT, Priest, to CROMWELL.

Thanks him for his letters to my lord Cardinal, which he delivered, 30 June, by Mr. George Geforte. Was desired by my Lord to wait for him till "he might intend for to commen with me," and meanwhile to take meat and drink with him. Was called by him on Saturday, 6 Aug., as he walked into the park, when his answer was, "I am provided of so many chaplains that I cannot excuse you of the King's statute; but I am content for to admit you for my chaplain, and I would that ye should go to your benefice unto the time that I may avoid some of my chaplains, and then ye for to come." Replied that he had no house with his benefice, and had left my lord of Lincoln's service on the promise that Wolsey made to Mr. Cromwell and him at the Charterhouse; which also induced him to give up the chancellorship of Meath. He said he had no office void in the province of York, but would help him for the sake of Cromwell his special friend. He desired him to come to him at Cawode, about Exaltation of the Holy Cross, when he will provide him an office if possible. On 7 Aug. he admitted him for his chaplain, and Carbott went to York. Is thus undone without Cromwell's help, until he can be in household with his Grace, as Cromwell so often promised. York, 11 Aug.

6559. [CROKE to STOKESLEY.]

Today at 19 o'clock delivered the King's letters to the bishop of Verona, who was marvellously abashed at them, to judge both from his words and his countenance, which was extremely pale. He asked why the King wrote thus to him about the Florentines; for a letter of this kind, if shown to the Pope, would do more harm than good to the King's cause. He asked earnestly if the Pope knew anything of these letters. Suspects that he has heard that the Pope knows of them, considering that the King's packet to Stokesley was opened, and that the ambassador spoke as if he knew what the King wrote to the Pope before the letter was delivered. The Bishop first asked Croke if he knew the tenor of the letter; he replied that he did. He then asked if Stokesley knew. Told him that everything was sent principally to Stokesley and then to himself. Afterwards he inquired whether either of them had shown it to any one else,—which Croke denied; and he earnestly begged that no one might know of such a letter having been sent,—which Croke promised should not be done. He said he thought the letter had been devised by some friend of the Florentines, and asked Croke whether he did not think that the secretary had shown the copy to some one. Could not assure him of this. He replied that if Croke knew that the Pope had the copy, he would send it to the Pope, saying that it was devised by a friend of the Florentines and enemy to His Holiness's house, and that the King had signed it unawares. Suspected he said this to discover Croke's opinion of the secretary, who is an Italian, and perhaps his friend, whom "I hate not but love, unless that [I] fear lest by affection of country and by signification made [inter]changeably, the King's matters that I am put in trust with [may] be hindered, as we have no small tokens ne arguments, but . . . . . [p]roffes in which some ever the fault be by uttering of al * * * the opening of the packet. I thought if the copy of . . . . . letters to him were not come to the Pope to be a way to ca . . . . . to send it unto the Pope to the King's displeasure in con . . . . . if the copy of the King's letters to him be already in the Pope's [hands,] as it is not unlikely, seeing the opening of your packet by . . . . . brother, and the retaining of the posts at Bologna two days." It is a pity to deceive the goodman without profit to the King, and is [great] harm to him. He earnestly favors the King, and has caused many to write for him,—among others, his vicar, who was for nine years loc[umtenens] auditoris cameræ at Rome. Thinks he may be one of the Pope's delegates in the cause. Stokesley must decide whether it is better to be plain with him, being the King's friend, concerning the opening of this packet. Simonetus says that the [Pope] knew every word and working that we did. Verona, 10 Aug.

"As touching do . . . . . [it] is best that ye bear him on hand that ye think my lett[er] . . . . . to the King, and that ye will do all that ye can to excuse fath[er] . . . . . ., and that there is no so ready way to that as that Diony[sius by his] acts prove all his accusers liars, the which he must do with [gaining] many subscriptions and counsels. Thus ye must say I was th . . . . . with the vicar general, the which hath written for us already an[d] . . . . . and wholly of our opinion. And I showed him my lord of Wor[cester's letters]. And the vicar said to me these words: "Ut loquamini inter nos, dominus [meus est] totus papalis et dixit mihi hæc verba: Calixte, audio te concessisse s . . . . in hoc negotio, cave quid facias, nam ante breve obtentum posset esse [nimis] periculi, quia tu es sacerdos et habes multa sacerdotia a pontifice et a . . . . . pontifex fecit cum quibusdam qui ostenderunt se favere negotio regis [magnas] turbas et ego etiam sentio pro rege, sed nollem tibi aut mihi noceri. Respondi, Quomodo potest mihi noceri, quia ego jurisperitus sum et pr . . . . . est patrocinari?"

At last spoke to him of the e[pistle] Deus qui ecclesiam, which he said was entirely against our adversaries. He advised Croke to go before him to the Bishop, because the Bishop should . . . . . them come together. Found him at mass. Asked him to write to the Pope for the brief to the King, and a[lso] to Stokesley, and to keep the King's letter secret [from] the Pope. All this he granted. "But to the . . . . . [he] said, possum lactare dominationem vestram bonis verbis, sed nolo quomodo . . . . . in hoc negotio cui vel judicio suo vel favore in Cæsarem aliqu . . . . . in his quæ ad privatam ipsius utilitatem pertinebant nollebat . . . . . .

. . . . . [To] this I answered, Hoc tamen cum rex a dominatione vestra pet . . . . . quod si essetis Rhomæ facile a pontifice obtineretis * * * retus fidem meam qui verbis vestris credulus promptam in hoc operam authoritatemque vestram futuram scripsi. Ad hæc concessit se omnia apud pontificem conaturum." To the last he said that he would sooner incur the anger of the Pope than tell him that, even if the Pope knew it already. The more Croke spoke with him, the more he suspected that he thought the Pope knew of the King's letter. He said today that if he wrote to the Pope for the brief, he must say that he does it at the King's request; and if he shows the letter, which he will be compelled to do, he will do rather harm than good. Said that he might say that the King's ambassadors came to him secretly, and said that they had a letter for him, which they had lost, and of which the tenor was to ask him to move the Pope to issue the brief; and that their negligence might be concealed, they desired him to write to the King that he had received it, and to the Pope for the brief. This he refused to do; for if it should come out afterwards, or if the Pope had knowledge of the tenor, he would suspect him the more, and be displeased with him. "And every [minute] he inculked: Ego vereor ne culpa alicujus secretarii hæ literæ pervenerint ad notitiam pontificis." Asks for advice, and for some knowledge of what the senate has done, "and ever make you for the consideration that ye by experience knowye to our ambassador that ye knowye nothing." The Bishop told Croke today that when Paul came he could tell him of Croke's coming. 11 Aug.

Was again this afternoon with the vicar general, who says that the Bishop has not yet licenced him, but will not forbid him to write; but the Bishop feared he might incur the Pope's displeasure and be hurt, and himself also blamed. The vicar in heart is all the King's. He told Croke that he would write, and alleged against the Bishop's doubt of the Pope, the bishop of Worcester's letters of the brief, saying that if the Pope would not be content for any man to give counsel, he would not grant the brief. He said that the Bishop and he talked of how to move the Pope for the brief, "and said that his desire was that the Pope . . . . . præciperet omnibus ut justo et diligente studio prævio dicerent et scriberent . . . . . quid sentirent in conscientia sua, neque id celarent ullomodo * * * Sed omnia facere oportet by exhorting and shew[ing the] great trust the King hath that he alonely will not get him this br[ief, but] also many friends."

Wishes to know where is the drea[m] of her who married two brothers, which he read to Croke in Saint J[ohannis] et Pauli library. Asks him not to leave Venice till his return. Has informed the bishop of Verona about the bishop of Chieti.

Le Grand, III. 491. Colbert MS. 468 V., p. 509.

I have been obliged to stay in this town since yesterday morning, having been informed on my arrival that the faculty had entered into conclave to discuss anew (regratter) the matter of the king of England, at the instigation of Beda, Barthelemy, and their accomplices, who, as you know, after so many precious alarms made by them, the moment they were discharged from the presence of their dean, of the bishop of Senlis, of the abbots of Premonstré, St. Martin, Vendôme, Cussi, &c., attempted on their own authority to break what had been done and concluded in so great a company. As the disease seems to gain strength, notwithstanding the remedy applied by the King, I must tell you the state to which matters have come. In the absence of the persons above named, these good lords making their capitular congregations at their own pleasure, and leading, by an authority long ago usurped, part of the faculty at their devotion, have sent to signify to the bishop of Senlis, being in his diocese, under pain of disobedience, that he should deliver up to them the act and register of the determination which had been come to upon this matter. This act he had taken, and was keeping in behalf of the King, whose commands he told them he had, not to give it to any one but himself. For this the doctors above named were going to proclaim in their congregation that he be deprived of the faculty as a rebel. But those who saw the injury which might arise from this to the faculty got them to send again to the bishop of Senlis, with more express orders, fortified by greater threats than before. He replied as before, adding that although he was bound to obey his mother the faculty, he was still more bound to obey the King, who was the father of that which they called his mother. After these feasts they are going to replace the matter in the office. My brother, persevering in his martyrdom, is trying night and day to neutralize their efforts; for although the King might punish them afterwards, there would still remain a great scandal, which could hardly be removed. For my part I have done what I could, but the thing is so far gone that they will carry it, if those who have power to redress the wrong do not see to it. If you knew the difficulties in which my brother is continually placed, you would not be surprised that I have heretofore urged that he should have his congé; but even if it were granted to him, and he were willing to depart from here, I have begged him to remain some days till he has got over this fever. The occasion of the said doctors being assembled yesterday was to make of their number a new determination opposed to the former one. They have been defeated for the present, but no pains have been taken to prevent them issuing prohibitions to all those of the faculty, that none of them should sign the negative, viz., according to the will of the king of England, but not forbidding them to sign according to that of the Queen; so you see what impartiality they show. The very day I left Cognac, I saw the negative reply, which the King ordered to be made to the Imperial ambassadors on their demand that the vote of each person should be communicated to them. This refusal was on the ground that the decision of the faculty should be left untouched, and that it was not reasonable that special information should be given to the parties. But finding that Beda and the others intended this very thing, and a great deal more, I spoke with the President to see if, after so many express commands from the King, he would do what his duty required. This he has promised me to attempt; and I believe that he will do so, for he is too good a man not to prefer the King's will to the friendship of others in a good and just cause.

I have informed you of all this, that you may be able to advise the King. It is needful not only to reply to the Emperor's ambassadors, but to see to the matter here; for what has been done hitherto by Dr. Guarray, of which the ambassadors speak so often, has not been by their request, nor by that of the Emperor or the queen of England, but at the instigation of Beda and his friends, exhorting him to maintain the honor of his country throughout the world. Hence I suppose it did appear, and from their other drifts on the information which the King has ordered to be made of it, that several individuals still are in great fear of stating the truth, knowing the favor shown to the said doctors. Tomorrow morning I shall leave this on my journey, and shall endeavor to satisfy the king of England to the best of my power; he being, as I know, fully informed of these new practices, and not without suspicion that there is something concealed which he does not understand, for he cannot imagine that such abuses would be committed if the King did not wish it. And for my part, if I had not been present, and seen how much the King was vexed in your absence, and since, I should not myself know what to think of it. Presidents La Viste and Polliot were ready to leave this a few days ago; but on receiving the commission to report the things done and said by the said doctors, they have resolved not to move till their report is made as much in accordance with the King's intention as possible, my brother remaining meanwhile to instruct them. The rest of the acts demanded by the king of England have been granted today with some difficulty. No one could have thought ill of it if I had used my credence with the President, for I have not gone beyond the King's intention.

Begs an answer to what he wrote by Savigny, so that he may not be anxious on his arrival in England, and that a letter be written to Besnier about money to be delivered to the commissioners of John Joachim on the 18th, which the General of Normandy said should be ready on the 8th. Paris, 14 Aug.

15 Aug. 6563. WILLIAM DU BELLAY to ———.

Le Grand, III. 473.

Till now I have not written to you of the affair which has kept me here by the King's command, owing to your absence, and since your return, because I did not think men had so great partiality against the King's opinion that they would try to bring again into discussion a matter already passed. I have only written of it to my brother and Villandry, who knew the whole circumstances, and would not trouble you about it needlessly, and still less the King, regretting that he should have been so often wearied with the talk of such venerable lords. The present affair, since I spoke with you at Chantilly, and you sent to this town to show Beda the King's intention, has been conducted with such wicked intrigues, that I have seen the King's interests in great danger; and, but for the president, who has great influence with Beda, there would have been such a serious mischance from the doings of a fool, as the sense of a thousand wise men could not easily have rectified. I believe any judge but the president, who believes Beda infallible in his theology, would have imputed to him as a mortal sin what even the president can hardly consider venial. The King has decreed a commission to enquire into the misconduct of Beda and his companions, at the instance of the earl of Wiltshire, and, among other things, has written to the president to command the beadle of the faculty of theology to deliver an authentic copy of a certain act signed by Beda, which he would have been glad not to have signed. Of this the English ambassadors had requested that the original might be delivered to them, or at least to a third party, or else a copy in his own hand, for another copy would not serve their purpose, as the matter concerned the King their master; but the president did not dare to deliver a copy of it without leave of the faculty, or command of the King. To get it by the faculty's leave was to begin again at A, B, C, owing to the opposition of Beda. The ambassadors therefore chose to get the King's letters. I went yesterday morning to present them to the president, who assured me that he would obtain the copy; and to satisfy the king of England, my brother and I, being here at 4 o'clock, went to the president, who said the beadle had refused to deliver it, except by command of the faculty, because no copy was ever made without leave, and until it was approved by the faculty. On this I told the president that there was a great difference according as a private person or a prince demanded the transcript, and that it was no business of the faculty for what cause it was asked, for the cause might be such as it was desirable to conceal;—that the act which I now asked for had already been approved by the faculty, and signed by the deans, syndic, deputies, clavigeri, and beadle of the same. This he acknowledged, but said the beadle was in some perplexity for fear of being accused of forgery. Then my brother and I answered, that the reason why we wished to have the copy was because I had been present at the act, and had noted it. But as Beda and his accomplices regretted having signed it, and the beadle was at their command, and especially as the minute signed contained erasures in some places, we were afraid it had been tampered with. For a whole hour we could not get the president to promise that he would use anything but prayers. At last he agreed to use some gracious commands, promising to bind himself to the beadle before two notaries, that he would bring back his original minute. All this, however, was to no purpose. I felt much ashamed that a president of Paris, representing the King's person, and exhibiting his letters, after being denied so many requests by a beadle, did not venture to command him expressly, and even force him to obey. This I could not help telling him; and, though I knew he did not like it, I managed, with a credence which my brother then devised, to embolden him so that he made himself obeyed. He sent the beadle to bring the act, and we read it together. He promised to give us a copy, but afterwards to ask that time should be allowed him till 5 or 6 o'clock this morning, which the president has granted him.

I have written to you because I know the president was displeased with the freedom I took, and has this morning written to you without the knowledge of my brother and me. You must not think that Beda is the sole wrong-doer, for he has plenty of fellows, who would be glad enough to provoke the King to do something hasty, so as to acquire the character of martyrs. I have often heard of their wicked purposes, under the color of good faith. Paris, 15 Aug.

15 Aug. 6564. PRESIDENT LIZET to the GRAND MASTER OF FRANCE.

Le Grand, III. 480.

The King has written to me by the bishop of Bayonne to obtain from the beadle of the Faculty of Theology a copy of some acts made upon the discussion of the king of England's marriage, and send them to him. I have accordingly obtained from him the copy of the act required by the king of England, and send it to Francis. The bishop of Bayonne desired me to give it to him, to take to England, saying, he was so commissioned by Francis; but this does not appear by the letters missive brought me by the 1530.

Bishop, while the commands of Francis are distinct that I should send it to him, and not let it be shown to any one else. I think, for reasons which I have written to Francis, they should do no more until I have informed him how the affair has been conducted, and that the information might perchance injure the king of England, rather than serve him. Paris, 15 Aug. Signed: "Pierre Lizet."

15 Aug. 6565. Du Bellay to Montmorency.

Le Grand, III. 500.

I have seen such dissimulation in the President about the affair contained in my other letters that I was obliged to show him at length, and as gently as I could, the intention of the King. He asserted that he knew as well as anybody what the King wished, and what was his interest (ce qui luy touchoit). I admitted this, and much more; but seeing that he put me off for three or four days, I told him that I had an express command from the King, which I had just communicated to him; and especially I told him what, the time I mounted on horseback, the ambassadors of the Emperor had demanded, and the answer that had been made to them. I do not know what he said in answer. He spoke to me three or four hours in Latin "en Auvergnaz," without stopping to take breath; but whatever it was, I could not get him to order the beadle of the faculty to deliver the acts demanded by the King. At last he delivered a copy, but refused to show the original to compare with it, acknowledging that there was at the end a small error by which he might be accused of forgery. You know the suspicion that there was long ago, that Beda had tampered with the beadle's register; so I urged all the more that the said register should be seen before the beadle had an opportunity of consulting with the others. Still I could not get the president to do more than send humble requests to the beadle, although he said openly he would do nothing with it. At last, fearing the president's conduct was owing to cowardice, I summoned him, in the King's name, in the presence of the beadle, to cause him to obey the King's will; and if he would not, I protested against him;—thinking that this course would relieve him from responsibility as regards the other, as I had explained to him in a whisper beforehand. At last we all expressed ourselves very well satisfied with each other, the president assuring me that I should have the act that evening, though in the end he asked me to wait till 5 o'clock this morning; from which time I have remained booted till 11, sending to him all my men, one after another, to know what more I should do, who are all forbidden access to him. Some were told that the door key was lost, others that Monsieur was asleep, others that he had taken medicine, others that they and the bishop of Bayonne must have patience. Thereupon I found means to ascertain that after the conference of our masters, he had slipped off by a back way, and I went to find him at St. Germain des Préz, where he had forbidden the monks to let anybody enter. You will hardly believe what I say, but it is only half the truth. I found this great doctor "genolz" (à genoux?) before Mons. St. Mathelin, and I asked him very graciously to give me the act he had promised me. He answered that he had no business to believe me (qu'il n'avoit charge de me croire), and that he had sent it that morning to the King by special post. I answered that it was all right, but that he had made me lose a whole day by not opening his door to my men, which I complained of more than of the trouble of tracking him through the fields, for that the service of the King required. He said he was obliged to obey his physicians, who bid him not move from his chamber, or speak to anybody, as he had just taken medicine; and I believe he thought it was a month since he refused admittance to my men. I had so much pity on this answer that I did not answer him again, but bade him good bye, and asked Audebert, if he had not yet despatched the post, to wait for my packet. Hearing of this from Audebert, he immediately sent him an usher, commanding him, under pain of being counted a rebel to the King, to send off the post immediately, and instructing the usher, if Audebert did not obey, to take him to the conciergerie. I do'nt know if I live in fairy land, but I never saw anything so ridiculous, if it be not to the injury of the King's affairs. He now repents of his order, and sends to me that I may send my packet when I please. But in any case, if you do not wish to be much importuned by England, send me immediately that act, which I would have bought with my blood, or would rather that he had not promised it to me, for on his assurance I promised it last night to the king of England's agent here. The farce has been so prolonged that it is now 3 o'clock, p.m., when I am leaving this town to see your garden of Chantilly, where Madame la Grande Maistresse remains till Wednesday. After that I shall endeavor to make up for these delays. Paris, 15 Aug.

Vit. B. XIII. 101 b. B. M. Friar Franceys at his departing took 10 cr. to friar Dionysius, to continue the things which he has begun, and to retain doctors of law to write for the King. Three counsels he has already obtained, which Croke has. Friar Thomaso, to whom the King is not a little beholden, sent a conclusion in the King's favor to Utino, where Dionysius practised, and obtained the subscriptions of ten doctors of law. To magnify his own labors, he hinted that Dionysius was not dealing faithfully; whereupon Stokesley advised Croke to send the information to father Francis, suppressing names. Did not believe the tale, but wanted father Francis to write to Dionysius, and by emulation of the one to prick on the other to the better advancement of the King's causes. Enclosed the letter of which Stokesley approved, in the letters of the latter to Benet. Blames Benet for his discourtesy in opening it, for he might know that the Bishop is not accustomed to make any man privy to his several letters, nor yet to enclose letters to which he is not privy. Believes that he has exceeded his commission in doing it, and has done an injury both to Croke and Stokesley, showing that he mistrusts them, and wants to take them in some fault of negligence or infidelity. Their acts will declare them free from any suspicion, but his will go near to prove him guilty in both. Benet has marvellous great acquaintance in Bologna. Asks him to tell the King that one friend he has made, the Prothonotary, has said that some of the King's ambassadors at Bologna advised him not only not to further, but to hinder, the King's cause as much as possible. This advice is as likely to be Benet's as any other's; for if he had been earnest in the King's cause, he would not have gone about to discourage, threaten, and rebuke Croke at Bologna because he had diligently and prosperously labored for the King; "and so to revile me for . . . . . [comma]undemente, and according to the same for . . . . . rone, written in the King's favor, and their practising to get the King's friend[ship] . . . . . laid to my charge in specie), me thinketh ye passed the compass [of your] authority." His only reason for accusing him to the King was the words of the Emperor's chancellor. "The Ki[ng's] causes are not promoted ne advanced with getting up and down . . . . . dalliance, but with faith, pain, and diligence;" of which, if Benet had a sparkle, he would not go about to cloak the infidelity of those whom he knows secretly to hinder the King's ca[use] as much as they can, nor disclose to them all that is spoken to him as ambassador, nor discourage those who serve truly and profitably, and try to trip them up, as he did by opening Croke's letter. Knows about his ill reports of him, sent into England and to the bishop of London, and how he has dispraised and depraved his acts, and the learning of father Francis in Scripture. Could have accused him if he had been as prompt to do so as Benet has been. If he has sent Croke's letter into England, Stokesley and Croke will be forced to show the King the truth of him, "the which to your little honesty took u[pon yourself to] break up my letters, and by expostulation of the tenor of [them to] father Francis, have brought him in mind that . . . . . him upon suspicion unto you * * * my request or any others, so the said Dionysius upon father Francis letter now already hath refused any more to meddle." As the King's ambassadors suspect him so much that they open all his letters, and put him out of credence, will not meddle further till he knows the King's pleasure. Venice, 16 Aug.

Lazarus Bonamicus Bassanus, who has been with me at Ferrara, told me that you had spoken with him. Is glad to hear Croke has contracted a friendship with such a learned man. Hearing that Croke has not returned to England, but is now at Venice, has brought over Coelius (Cælius) Calcagninus, who will write in the case proposed by him. He has many arguments making for the matter, but he has not done all that lay in his power, not being aware either of Croke's presence at Venice, or of his desire to have the thing effected. Croke must write to acquaint him with both facts. Your servant whom you despatched to Bologna has conveyed to you by Ferrara my request that you would get Procopius on the buildings of Constantinople copied out for you. It will be a good thing for you to have such a rare author in your library, and to me it will be a help in some geographical studies, in which I have to fix the site of some remarkable cities. R. O. St. P. I. 365.

After receipt of your letters from Southwell, dated St. Laurence's Day (10 Aug.), I perceived that you were in some displeasure and anxiety because I had certified you of the finding of certain "offices" (inquisitions) respecting the bishopric of York. The bearer will restore you to quiet of mind by showing you the copies of the offices, and how they will be for your profit; for although your conviction in the præmunire is touched upon in the preamble, your pardon and restitution stand good, and you need be in no fear of your spiritual or temporal goods. Were it otherwise, I am sure the King would make all good, for he has no wish that you should be troubled. Take patiently the finding of these offices, and on the return order shall be taken that you are not molested in your revenues. The Dean and others have had a favorable answer from the King touching your colleges, of which "offices" shall be found. I expect to get 1,000 marks at the audit for Winchester. Send the papers under seal relating to Battersea. Strangwish continually cries against you in the court, and the Council have determined to write to you in consequence. I wish you were rid of the man. The prebend of Witwang shall be ordered to your satisfaction.

You are much bound to God that you have obtained the good wishes of the people in those parts, and the report of it here has augmented the good opinion of many towards you; yet, notwithstanding, your charitable demeanor is misinterpreted here by your enemies. Yet follow all such things that shall stand best with the pleasure of God and the King. Some allege you keep too great a house, and are continually building. I beseech you, as I have often done before, to consider the times, and refrain from all building more than necessity requires.

I thank you for the geldings you have sent, and think you happy that you are now at liberty to serve God, and banish all vain desires of the world, which bring men nothing but trouble and anxiety. "Wherefore, in mine opinion, your Grace being as ye are, I suppose ye would not be as ye were to win a hundred times as much as ever ye were possessed of."

The bishop of Bayonne is daily expected, and my lord of Wiltshire is coming home. The Emperor is popular with his subjects, but they will not leave Luther. He is making preparations against the Turk to recover Hungary. His second son is dead. The Germans will have a General Council. The Florentines defy the Pope, "and it is supposed that they shall vynce," as there is a pestilence in the Pope's party. There is great "carystye" in Italy, and wheat is sold at 40*s.* a quarter. The Papal ambassador is expected in less than 14 days. It is impossible for me to repair to you at this time. I would have done so long since, had I not been prevented by important business. 22 Aug. 6579. JOHN HIGDON and ROBERT CARTER, Priests, to WOLSEY.
R. O. Have diligently done their duty in Wolsey's college. Have searched the college muniments in Oxford and London, whether they might lawfully justify, or not. Were assisted by Edmund Knyghtley; and after long deliberation, concluded that the common law will not help us in this case, because your donation to the college is not effectual, but void in law; "forasmuch as ye, being seized in the lands of the houses suppressed in fee simple only, and to no use expressed in the King's deed of gift unto your Grace, was in danger of præmunire what time ye granted the said lands unto the college; and all the judges agreeth that the præmunire must have relation not only from the judgment given, but from the first act done contrary to the same. Wherefore, because your Grace used your authority legatine, and thereby was in case of the statute of provisions before the donation made unto your college, they say that the donation now standeth at the King's pleasure." Made intercession with the King. As Dr. Nicholas is highly favored, sent him before to the King to inform his conscience. After the King was at Windsor, I, the Dean, and Robert Carter, spake with my lord of Norfolk, who at first called us into his privy chamber, and declared we should have no more lands than such as belonged to the priory of Frideswide's; the college to be dissolved, the building to be taken down, and made conformable to the lands of the priory. But after I had shown him the loss of the revenues which would be incurred by the King and us if the college were dissolved, he stayed, and took instructions in writing. After I had delivered him the letter of attorney, and Mr. Tressham (?) and Mr. . . . nolde had delivered him letters from your Grace's canons, desiring his favor, he went straight to the King. Meanwhile Mr. Norrese advised us to attend at the King's closet, that we might speak with him as he was coming to mass. As we attended, there came Mr. Stephens, the King's secretary, to whom we delivered letters from the college. He promised faithfully to do the best he could.

As soon as the King entered, I, the Dean, delivered him the college letters, which he graciously accepted; and calling me, Carter, and Wi. Tressham apart, said, submissa voce, "I understand that ye are come unto us as suitors for your college, and have brought with you a letter of attorney to commune with our council, and to take some good way for the behoof of your house. Surely we purpose to have an honorable college there, but not so great and of such magnificence as my lord Cardinal intended to have, for it is not thought meet for the common weal of our realm, yet will we have a college honorably to maintain the service of God and literature. And as touching communication to be had with our Council, there are few of our learned council present at this time. We will that ye continue as ye have done till Michaelmas next coming, and then wholly to receive your rents, and then also to repair unto us; and ye shall at that time know our further pleasure, and what way shall be taken for the continuance of that college."

As the King went, he called to him my lords of Norfolk and Wiltshire. These two lords are now favorable to the college; for Norfolk came afterwards, and said to us, "Sirs, albeit I have spoken hardly to you at the beginning, yet will I be an helper in your matter; for the King is very gracious lord unto you, and purposeth that ye shall have a great deal more lands than I spake of. Move not the King contrary to his pleasure in no case, for he is minded to be very beneficial unto you. And as for the commissions, labor not to stay them, ne care not for them; they are traverseable, &c." Then we labored that the site and circuit of the college might be saved, and the Exchequer not meddle with them, lest the revenues impropriate should be lost; on which the lords of Wiltshire and Norfolk consented to obtain letters from the King to that effect. We came to Oxford on the 13th of August, when two pursuivants came to me, the Dean, with two commissions; by which I perceive that the Exchequer have little or nothing to do in the matter of inquisition. So we advised Mr. Tressham to speak with the commissioners, showing them the letters missive, which they refused to admit as a sufficient discharge, and required a supersedeas. By the help of Dr. Stephens we have obtained a supersedeas, so as the commissioners shall not intermeddle with the site and circuit. You will now know in what state the college stands, and will learn more by the bearer. "No more; but our Lord Jesu be ever your helper, endue you with patience, and grant you long incolumity to his pleasure and your consolation. Amen. 6580. HANNIBAL GRISONIUS, Canon of Istria, to HENRY VIII.

The bishop of London and Croke have been daily urging him to aid the King's just cause. Although to do so is dangerous, he has consented, in consideration of the King's singular virtues, both in learning and religion. His book against Luther, which is admired by most learned men, will commend his name to immortality. Knows that his writings are not perfect enough to be offered to the King, but he has done what he can. Has been hindered by circumstances which he would prefer the King should know from his ambassadors. Many persons are afraid to write or approve of the writings of others. Has written what he thought, and given the writings to the ambassadors. Asks the King to keep them secret. 6581. [CROKE to HENRY VIII.]

On the 22nd of August, received from Utino, by father Francis, the counsels of two doctors of law, one of them subscribed by two other doctors. Received the same day, through father Francis, a new consultation of Dr. Hannibal Grysonius, which the bishop of London likes well. His previous counsel was not so exquisite as this, as he did not know that it was a prince's cause. There is great fear here of writing or doing anything for the King. If there had been no commandment to the contrary, the King would have gained, by means of Hannibal, the whole college of lawyers at Padua. The same day, gave to the bishop of London parchment copies of the instrument of Bologna obtained by him, and of the instrument of Padua, obtained by Croke; which copies in the house of the ambassador Casale, and in their presence, were ordered by the bishop of Lodi to be signed by three notaries and sealed with his seal. He said that he wished he had known the King's pleasure when he was at Milan, for he would have caused the college of jurists and theologians to have granted the King their conclusions under their seal; and he offered to sign the instrument. For this offer the Emperor's ambassador quarrelled with him next day, to no little trouble of his mind, who told him thereof.

Asked the patriarch of Venice to make a transumpt of the instrument, but he answered that he dared not, lest he should incur the displeasure of the Senate. Philip de Cremis, and the provincial of the Grey Friars, and others who had received money for their work from Croke, rather as a fee than as hire, came to him and demanded their bills again, offering him his money back, and protesting that they would never be against the King. As Croke, with Stokesley's advice, and for other reasons, refused to do this, Philip de Chremis, the governor's vicar at Verona, said that he would send the money to the Venetian ambassador in England to be presented to the King himself.

The Emperor has rewarded a foolish friar, called Felix, with a benefice of 500 ducats a year, for writing against the King. Francis Marinus, provincial of the Grey Friars, told Croke that he had been offered 1,000 ducats to prevent any friar in his province writing or subscribing for the King, and he knew well that the brief which Croke alleged to him would be privily restrained. He says he will do nothing to stop his friars. Cannot find out that he intends to do so, but it appears by a bill of information given to Croke by Ambrose of Padua, by whom Simonetus obtained the seal and conclusion of the college of theologians, that Marinus was the means of presenting the work of Berges against the King, as well as the authorities, instructions and reasons delivered to Berges by the bishop of London on his oath, to write in confirmation of the King's cause. Encloses a copy of this information. Berges has now gone to the Emperor with hope of great promotion. He was presented to the bishop of London as a sure supporter of the King, but he slanderously divulged the cause at Rhoigo, when sent thither by Casale.

Ambrose, however, though he was much troubled for procuring the seal of the university of Padua, defended the seal faithfully. The Emperor's ambassador sent a canon regular to induce him and his fellows, by threats, prayers, or rewards, to retract their grant, or to give a new sentence upon the case that the marriage with prince Arthur was consummated, or to determine that the marriage was not separable. But to this he answered, that before, not knowing that it was a prince's cause, he was greatly troubled by the Senate for meddling; and now, as the canon named the Emperor unto him, he would not meddle without special licence of the Senate to speak freely. The Spaniard was dismissed with this answer; so that their ruffling is to the honor of the King's cause, and discomfort of his adversaries. Most of this trouble comes from the bishop of Chieti, who is very desirous that the Pope should write to him for his opinion, and has twice written to his Holiness about it. Having had no answer, "he maketh very dangerous and religious" to speak anything in favor of the King's cause. But his conscience and fear of speaking without licence do not prevent him from speaking against the cause, and from saying that it is a shame for learned men to be moved to give their opinion without the Pope's licence, secretly and in corners, as is the case now. He cannot approve of the King being named, or that in reasoning about the cause we should allege any reasons or authorities for it, or disprove any against it. This mishandling, he thinks, dishonors the King, and perverts men's judgments, and he was therefore advised by Casale to write to the King about it. As he greatly believes his own wit and reason, the bishop of London and Croke have tried to make him write his mind and reasons to the King, so that he may declare his ignorance and folly to his own shame and the King's pleasure.

Encloses a letter from James Ziegherus about Cælius Calchagninus, a man of birth, learning and authority, who wrote marvellously well against Luther's De Libero Arbitrio. Will not say for certain that Calchagninus will write for the King till he has spoken with him; but if he can obtain his favor, doubts not through him to get the seal and conclusion of the university of Ferrara. Fears that his necessity will cause him to give up prosecuting this success. Is more than three months behind with his diets, and without speedy help must come home begging. Reminds the King how freshly matters went forward while he had anything to help himself; and yet he never gave any one anything before having his conclusion for the King, without former prayer or promise of reward. Those who have done the King little good, and would not have done any if Croke's examples and acts had not pricked them forward, blame him for divulging the cause, which they of envy did themselves, and say that he gave money beforehand;—which he only did in the case of some lawyers, whose profession is to take money and be retained. Has spent in the King's cause more than 500 cr.

Delivered the King's letters to the bishop of Verona on 10 Aug. On reading them he waxed extreme pale, and said that the letters were similar to those shown to the Pope, and would do much harm to the King's cause, and perhaps irritate the Pope against himself. Could not, without great difficulty, obtain from him letters to the King, promising to keep his Highness's letters secret from the Pope.

He utterly refused on 17 Aug., in consequence of instructions he had received from Venice, to write to the Pope for the brief, or to get father Paulinus to write, or to give licence or orders to his vicar to do so, although the day before he had granted my desire to do all the above.

He said that if he were at Rome he would have no doubt of obtaining the brief, but that the emulation of his adversaries would prevail against his letters. He recounted his past troubles for meddling in the cause, and said that unless he could show his suit for the brief to be from the King's instance, he would seem more busy than needed, and incur the Pope's displeasure, considering his contrary commandment. To avoid this, he would have to show the King's letters, which would utterly set the Pope against his Highness. Asked him to write this answer to the King, mentioning his fears; but he said he neither would nor dared give the King occasion to be displeased with the Pope, and begged Croke to report his answer. He says that his vicar has written in the King's favor, but dared not let his works pass his hands without the Pope's licence. The truth is that he fears to let them pass his hands because of the Bishop's contrary commandment.

Sent copies of his and Paulinus' letters about it long ago. Was told by the vicar that his master was altogether papal; and said to him, that, seeing the Pope's indignation at those who favored the King's cause, he had better not offend the Pope, as he has many benefices. To which he answered by asking how he could be injured, as he was a lawyer and bound to counsel persons. Believes this to be true; for when Croke asked the Bishop to give leave to or command his vicar to write, and said that perhaps he cared more for the Bishop's leave than the Pope's, he asked whether the vicar had said this, and said he was not acting honestly. Said they had heard at Venice that he did not favor the King's cause; and he then suspected Aleander of having told them. Said to him that, from the suspicions he entertained of those men, he showed that he was not blameless. At this he fumed, and to shift the blame asked Croke whether, if the King ordered him to return home, he would be afraid to disobey; to which Croke assented; and the Bishop said that he likewise ought to fear disobeying the Pope, who is his prince, but he had received letters advising him not to communicate this to any one.

Could not get from him whose letters he meant, but father Paulinus told Croke that it was Casale had written thus about him, blamed his wit, and "elevated" his authority and credence with the King. The Bishop, however, replied in a manner displeasing to Casale.

This is the case in which the King's matters stand, unless a transumpt of the brief has been lately brought, by which appears the Pope's cold affection to the King's causes at Rome. Venice, 24 Aug.

I have received the King's letters respecting Thomas Strangwise, requesting me to make an arrangement with him. I am obliged to the King and to you for so impartial a letter, and I doubt not to make it appear that I am not indebted to Strangwise for such a sum as he demands. Notwithstanding the necessity that I am in, I have, within three days after the delivery of the King's letters, written to Cromwell to make arrangements with Strangwise; and if this fail, I will send some person sufficiently instructed to answer his demands; beseeching you to be favorable to me in this and my other causes. 6585. SIR WILLIAM BULMER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

In obedience to his letter, writes to inform him of the circumstances of the matter between Wolsey and Thomas Strangwys for Bulmer's cousin, George Bowes, whom he bought of Wolsey. In the first place, showed Wolsey the interest that Strangwys had by the late bishop of Durham, and Wolsey ordered him to speak for himself to the Council, of which Sir William Gascoigne was treasurer, Mr. Frankeleyn, chancellor of the bishopric, and Sir Thomas Tempest, Bulmer, and others, were members. He showed nothing for himself, but an "office," found after the death of Sir Ralph Bowes; at the finding of which office George Bowes was not born. The Council therefore thought he was not entitled to George Bowes. Supposes the treasurer and Mr. Frankeleyn will say he would have bought him; but Wolsey gave Bulmer the preference. Wolsey agreed to give Sir Thomas Strangwys 200*l.* for his right, but Bulmer does not know how he was paid. It was agreed that he should make his release to Bulmer, who, on sight of a warrant signed by Wolsey, should pay him 100*l.* which he owed Wolsey. Never paid the money, as the warrant was not produced. Should have caused an office to be found after the birth of George Bowes. The matter was worth little more than 22*l.* At the creation of my lord of Richmond and Somerset, Strangwis told him that Wolsey had not paid him the 200*l.*, and asked him to remind his Grace, who answered that he would take such an order with him as Bulmer would not need to speak any [more]. Strangwise thought Wolsey did but drive him, and offered to sell it to Bulmer, who bought it. Thinks that if Wolsey makes any recompence, it should be to him, and not to Strangwis.

He acknowledges himself already paid 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* by the dean of Cardinal's college, and is content to receive of the said dean another 100 marks; to accept Sir William Bulmer's obligation for 100*l.*; to take 200*l.* in ready money; and to accept a ward or wards within the bishopric of Durham to the value of 100*l.*, and a warrant to Richard Bellesys for 166*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, in full payment of the remainder.

He also desires 200 marks for the bringing up of the lady Margaret Douglas, daughter of the earl of Angus.

R. O. 2. For the payment of this according to the above form, Wolsey had agreed with Strangways, as Sir William Gascon and Master Cromwell can testify. Dr. Marshall, Master Arundel, and others, were also privy to the agreement. Even if he received full payment of this claim, Strangways has lost above 2,000*l.* by my said lord Cardinal as follows:—The wardship of Geo. Bowys was given him by my lord of Durham in payment of a debt of 600*l.* for eight years' service done to the Bishop without fee or reward, as Mr. Frankelyn, then chancellor, and Mr. Metcalf, then auditor, know; but he lost 1,200*l.* by that ward being taken from him; for though Wolsey sold the ward to Sir William Bulmer for 800*l.*, Bulmer sold him again to Sir William Evers for 1,900*l.*, and retained profits to the value of 1,200*l.* in his own hands. Mr. Frankelyn and Mr. Metcalf can testify that Strangways had good right to the ward by a special article in the bishop of Durham's will. Strangways was also expelled by Wolsey from a lease of the parsonage of Codyngham, made to him for nine years by the bishop of Murray, a Scotchman, who was then parson, by which he lost above 50*l.* every year; and Wolsey also compelled him to pay him 200 marks for two years' rent of the parsonage, which he had already paid to the bishop of Murray, on the ground that the Bishop was the King's enemy; so that his total loss on the parsonage was 580*l.* If Wolsey will deny the premises, Thomas Meryng, who was surety for the said 200 marks, will report the truth. Mr. Gostewyke also, Wolsey's comptroller, can bear witness. Wolsey also deprived him of the portership of Berwick, which he had for life, and obtained a new patent for Lyon Gray, by which Strangways lost that office for fourteen years, and 20*l.* a year with it. "And Master Gostewyke received 40*l.* in ready money, which 40*l.* was delivered to my said lord Cardinal, then being the King's almoner, for the obtaining of the foresaid office to the said Thomas Strangways, which the said Mr. Gostewyke will testify and swear upon a book if he be so commanded." Total loss on the portership, 280*l.*

Notwithstanding these losses, Strangways, trusting Wolsey would have remorse and give him compensation, entered Wolsey's service, in which he remained three years, serving two years and more as comptroller, but never received the value of a grant in reward, though he spent in his service above 400*l.* "Summa for my expences in the said four* years, besides my reward for my pain and attendance, 400*l.*" Total loss beside the wardship, 2,280*l.*

Added in Strangways' hand: "Sir yer (there) ys no thyng contenyd yn ys (this) buwyk bott Mr. Gostwyk and divers others er sene to evere artycle, and wyll testefy the same yff thay be yer to (thereto) reqweryd or commandyd."

iii. The article in Ruthal's will above referred to, bequeathing to Strangways, who is called comptroller of the Bishop's house, in reward for his labor and his expense on the repairs at Awckland, the wardship and marriage of George son of Sir Ralph Bowes.

iv. Statement of further losses.—The King and many of the Council have written to the Cardinal to pay this 700*l.*, who still puts him off, even for payment of that sum, which will not recompense a third part of the wrongs he has sustained from Wolsey. Here follows the same further statement as in No. 2.

v. Strangways to the duke of Norfolk and the Lords of the Council.—Understands that Wolsey has sent them a copy of a release made by Strangways to Sir William Bulmer, of his title to the wardship of Geo. Bowes. This he was compelled to do, as it was impossible to resist Wolsey's influence; but the document itself proves the justice of his original title; and it is well known that the wardship was bequeathed to him by the Bishop in payment for his services. Is sure he would have continued to enjoy the wardship if the bishopric had not fallen into Wolsey's hands. Petitioned Wolsey for recompence when he lay at the White Hall, then called York's Place, and was desired to be content that Sir William Gascon and Mr. Cromwell should arrange matters between them; which they did, allowing 700*l.*, with the Cardinal's approval, for the wardship only; but of this he has never been able to obtain payment, the Cardinal putting him off with good words, alleging poverty, and at last sending to him his kinsman, Dr. Strangways, and Mr. Cromwell, Wolsey's servants, stating that he wished my Lord Chancellor, my Lord Chief Justice, and others of the judges to determine the matter. This they did, and confirmed Strangways' claim. "And sure I am, if a poor man should deny or go from his own deeds and acts, so many times proved as before said, such a poor man would nother byn taken for honest, nother true." If Wolsey cannot be compelled to pay it, hopes that he may be bound by recognizance in 3,000*l.* to abide the award of 12 or 24 substantial gentlemen, who, he has no doubt, will value his losses at least 1,000*l.* over the award made by Gascon and Cromwell. Signed.

26 Aug. 6592. NIÑO to CHARLES V.
Add. MS. 28,581, f. 55. B. M.

The bishop of London is a good deal discouraged by the refusal he has met with from the Signory. By means of a Spanish canon of the Augustinian monastery of Padua, don Pablo Torrellas, has got another canon of the same house, don Rafael de Coma, to revoke an opinion he had given against the Queen, and to write in her favor. Sends copies. Is endeavoring also to get the Dominican prior of SS. John and Paul of Venice to revoke his opinion, on which the bishop of London sets great store. His name is Master Thomas Oniven (Omnibonus). Suggests that the Emperor should give him a letter of credence for him, commending his services against the Lutherans, by which Niño might take occasion to bring him over. Letters have arrived from England, in which it is said the King makes great joy, avowedly for the liberation of the sons of Francis, but really for the determination of the doctors of Paris, which he has caused to be published by a crier in the streets of London. It is said the English murmur so much, that they have distinctly said that even if the Pope determined in favor of the divorce they will not suffer the Queen to be so insulted. This an Englishman has told me in great confidence. Has been since with the bishop of Chieti, and begged him very urgently to write to the king of England plainly what he thought about the matter, as it might be that his opinion would have some influence, because the King really loved the Queen so much that he would be very glad that one of his own servants should speak in her favor. The Bishop said he wished to study the case in order that he might communicate his opinion to the King by some of his companions, whom he would send to England for the purpose. Thinks the Emperor should write him a letter, stating that Niño had informed him how the bishop of London had sought his opinion in the case, and that he was studying it in order to reply;—that the Emperor thought the case was such that he ought to go to England and speak to the King in person, and that he could not do a better service to God than by causing the King to desist from his purpose. Hears that the bishop of London gives out that they have sent a brief from his Holiness, dated the 4th instant, authorising certain lawyers, of whom an opinion has been asked in this matter of the divorce, to give it without respect to any prince or person, according to their consciences. Has written to Mai to inquire the truth about it.
* * * Venice, 26 Aug. 1530.

Forgot to mention that he has got a copy of the act which the English obtained from the divines of Bologna,—a matter which is serious because they are subjects of the Pope. Is informed that the bishop of London will go to Bologna to see that every one of them writes in accordance with what he has said.

31 Aug. 6593. CARDINAL DE GRAMONT to MONTMORENCY.

resme to Francis. The Pope is by no means satisfied at the arrival of the duke of Albany here to have the management of the affairs of Francis. His Holiness told me frankly he was not a man with whom he could negociate, from the credulity with which he would listen to many people here, who would propose to him innumerable schemes without knowing anything of the Pope's intentions, and thus bring the Pope into suspicion with Francis. He was very anxious that I should leave before his arrival, and that meanwhile I should pray Francis in his behalf to command Pontresme not to move from here during Albany's stay. I promised to write accordingly, and have tried to persuade the Count, who, however, as an old servant of Francis, would like better to be with him than to be here in the midst of troubles, and without means to pay his expences.

Today the English ambassadors came to speak with me, pretending not to believe in my departure. Having told them of it, they asked me who was to come hither. When I told them Albany, they seemed much dissatisfied that they would have to resort to him, and could not help saying a word about it. They remained to dine with me, and I asked the knight Casal after dinner what were their objections to Albany, and whether he thought the king of England would be dissatisfied with him. He said Henry did not hate him so much as he used to do, but he thought there would be no surety in the said Duke, and mentioned that after the battle of Pavia he had been commissioned by Henry to do all he could to get possession of Albany's person. I do not myself see why Albany should not execute a still more important charge. I have some idea that he has a commission to speak about the marriage of the Pope's niece with the king of Scotland. If so, I beg you will get this part of his instructions countermanded, for I am sure that if the Pope hear of it he will never consent, and you will never have her during her life in France. Perhaps he will marry her at his own will, or that of the Emperor, if he perceive that no offer is made of one of the children of France. I think you could not do better than get her once into your hands, and afterwards dispose of her as you find would be most advantageous to Francis. This you might do by continuing the offer of one of the children. In any case, it will not be well to speak of the king of Scots until you have her in your hands.

I expect it will be 15 Sept. before I leave. By that time you will be able to have Albany and Pontresme instructed what to do. You will see why I have not communicated to the Pope the purport of Francis' letters about Ferrara. I have made such suit to the Pope, that he is resolved to break up the camp, and send every one home; and he has done so much, that, without making Cardinals, he gives orders to do this. Perhaps if we had spoken to him otherwise, and threatened him as the king of England seems going to do, he would have determined to keep up the army, and made a troop of Cardinals like sheep, which now he need not do. He proceeds to the dissolution, which I think will be accomplished in ten or twelve days, or fifteen at the utmost; for Pisa and Leghorn are in his hands, and the government of Florence, which is his only reason for keeping them, is at his pleasure.

I am frequently asked by the knight Casal to write to you about his brother. I forgot to tell you that when the duke of Milan was at Bologna he had some conversation with the Pope about a marriage with his niece. Since the death of Maximilian he has written to his ambassador here to touch on the subject again; to which the Pope has replied that he was very glad of what the Duke had said to him, but could give him no answer at that time; for though she was his niece, she was an unworthy kinswoman of Francis, without whose consent he would never marry her. The Duke replied to this that Francis had no interest in her, and that even if he were dissatisfied he could do no more than withhold the revenues he has in France, about 10,000 or 12,000 ducats, which he did not care for, and that he will endow her to the Pope's satisfaction, either with the duchy of Milan, or otherwise. The Duke was bound to the Emperor not to marry, for one year, without his consent, but he has got the Emperor to release him from his engagement. Rome, 31 Aug.

31 Aug. 6594. NICHOLAS RAINCE to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, III. 509.

Yesterday evening the Pope talked with me about the English marriage. I told him he could not do better than grant the delay desired by the English agents. He said he could not, and that he had had incredible pain in forcing the past delays from the Emperor. I tried all I could to show him it was for his honor and quiet. At last he made a sort of concession, saying that if the king of England would promise not to proceed de facto, viz., by the primacy of England or otherwise, during the delay, he would yet try to bring the Emperor to it for the sake of Francis; but was by no means sure he could succeed, considering how urgent the Emperor was that they should proceed at Michaelmas after the vacation. I asked if there were no means by which he could proceed of his own authority without the Emperor. He said, if the king of England's agents would approve him for judge, as reason required, he would grant not merely the four months' delay they asked for, but a year's if they liked. But they did not accept him freely, adding some remarks, which I leave you to imagine, to the effect that they did not understand their case well. Wednesday, 31 Aug. 1530.

31 Aug. 6595. CROKE to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Records of the Reformation, I. 412.

On 25 Aug. the bishop of London repaired to the Senate, though despairing of any other answer, because their obstinate behavior was worse than Croke had before informed the King. When the Bishop showed them their unreasonable dealing with the King, the Duke said that the stops made by the Senate were in consequence of the clamor of the bishop of Vaison, and denied that any displeasure had been done either by him or the Senate; the contrary of which every one knows to be true. The Duke, however, referred him to the ambassador Casale. At last the Duke desired them to retire, and on their return after about three quarters of an hour, promised in the name of himself and the Senate that they would not hurt or frighten any man who had or would speak or write in the King's cause, but he dared not make any utter demonstration of his promise, for respect of other princes. The comparison of this colorable grant and slender favor with their former acts and working against the King, shows that they do not wish any of their subjects to speak, write, or intermeddle for the King. Both publicly and privately they never cease to deter and alienate the King's friends. Their malignity is so printed in the minds of their subjects that he cannot see that this pretended favor and secret grant will do any good, considering that they will make no utter demonstration, without which men will not dare to write nor will believe in this grant. Assures the King that all the statements in his letter of the 25th are true, although the bishop of London has said nothing of them. Has written nothing but with his consent, and partly by his commandment.

Has spent nearly 600 cr. in the King's cause.

Has only received from Tuke 200 ducats de largo, and now Tuke promises him a letter of bank for 200 ducats more, saying that there are persons in Venice who will give him the money. Has not yet received the letter, and does not know where to get money. Unless the bishop of London on 26 Aug. had lent him 200 ducats, and Edmund Harwell another 200, would have been unable to live here, or to repay Thomas Omnibonus his expences in going to Ravenna, Ancona, Treviso, and other places to gain friends for the King. In this he has been more secret, wise, and constant than any other, never having named the cause as the King's. It is high time that his Highness' fautors were comforted and encouraged with some notable reward, for the Emperor deters his opponents and confirms his friends by threats, prayers, rewards and benefices.

Had searched in vain all the libraries for the Compilations of Innocentius, before receiving the King's letter about them, but some one has promised the bishop of London to send them to him today. Considering this grant of the Senate and the Pope's brief, sees no need of communicating the King's patent, and will not do so unless he sees great advantage to come therefrom. Venice, 31 Aug.

4 Sept. 6606. MAI to CHARLES V.

Add. MS. 28,581, f. 76. B. M.

Wrote to the Emperor on the 30th, that, according to letters from France, the duke of Albany was coming to Rome to arrange with the Pope about the property of his niece, whom perhaps Albany will marry to his son. He holds a commission, however, to treat of the marriage, not for him, but for the duke of Orleans; for so Albany himself has confessed in great secresy. The English ambassadors here have complained much of his coming, believing it may damage their cause; and cardinal De Tarbe has sent despatches to France on this account: so that the Pope thinks he will not come. Mai, however, believes he will, because the king of France will be glad to have him here in case anything be done about a Council ("a causa de lo que puede ser del Concilio"). And the Pope will be glad of it, "por ponernos en celos deste matrimonio, porque aunque sea hombre de bien y buen amigo de V.M., siempre le veo holgar destos contrapesos, y nunca ha sido posible poder le bien descarnar de Francia ni de Ynglaterra."

7 Sept. 6607. [CROKE to HENRY VIII.]

Vit. B. XIII. 107. B. M. Records of the Reformation, I. 587.

The bishop of London [sent,] by the hands of the Prothonotary, to the ambassador at Rome, on 31 Aug., a transumpt of the determinations of Pad[ua] and Bologna, which by Stokesley and Croke "were vi[iij. days] before the coming of your most honorable letters exemplified [to the] same intent sub fide notariorum et sigillo episcopi Laudensis." [To]day delivered to my lord of Lo[ndon] seventy-eight counsels and subscriptions, being all he had, besides [those nine] that the King had with the counsel of father Francis, the thirty that were burned at Vincence, and the authors of the instrument of P[adua]. Into which instrument now to g[et contracto put in,] he thinks almost impossible, as Stokesley has it with him. Will do the best he can. It was not this instrument which had debere, but a conclusion which Simonetus caused eighteen do[ctors of] divinity at Padua, not of the college, to sub-[scribe]. The conclusion is amended, and these words, I[mmo non posse], added. Will order the commission directed to him so that no friar shall use it, except in case of very need, and for great advancement of the King's cause. Did not cause father Francis to write to the King against Cassalis. Never saw the contents of the letter, which was sent to him sealed. The acts of father Francis and his friends deserve much thanks, whatever has been written from Rome by his adversaries.

Cannot find Innocentius' compilation in any library at Venice. Hears that they are at Bonony; but the book has been conveyed out of the library of the Servites by the prior, who is (as all fools) the King's adversary. Hopes to obtain a sight of it by Hierom Prævidellus* and Sir Andrew Cassalis. Hopes the King "will see the Prothonotary an[d] m . . . . . what for fear of advices that they have had ou[t of] England, what for shame by the earnest handling of my lord of London, I am informed that they buckle themselves to do somewhat." If they persevere, will as gladly report their good deeds, as he had good cause to report their bad. Assures the King of his constancy and di[ligence], and begs for money, both for diets and retainance of men; the lack whereof has incredibly hindered him. Has been miserably served of money. Has laid out 600 cr., and divers times sent his account to Tuke, who ever of new demands his account of him, and considers the money he has spent on the cause still in his hands, and that, therefore, he is more fully contented of his diets.

2. Draft of the same letter, slightly differing from the previous one. Several mutilations have been supplied from it. In this draft Croke states that the bishop of London has delivered to the Prothonotary 800 cr. for the preferment of the King's cause, and that he has this morning given Croke 300 cr.; "yet, considering th[e] money that I have laid out in your said . . . . causes, and the days passed, I have . . . . . by 200 . . . . . s account." 6608. JOHN BAPTIST PALLAVICINI to [STOKESLEY].

Today, just after breakfast, the governor sent a public messenger to fetch him, which is only done in the case of criminals, and showed him a copy of the letter he had written in the name of the college, with his own name at the foot, and expressed sorrow that so few had so lightly meddled with a serious matter. He asked for the names of the doctors of the university who assisted at the determination, and of those who live in other places. Was forced to obey him. Suspects the notary. Had no copy, and knew of none. Bologna, Nativity of Our Lady, 1530.

Was asked by the governor whether Stokesley had given him 25 cr. Replied that nothing had been given or offered. Puts his life in Stokesley's hand by telling him this.

6609. CROKE to HENRY VIII.

On Our Lady's Nativity, the governor of Bologna sent a common officer to friar Pallavicinus, who has singularly promoted the King's cause, and put him in great fear by ordering him to bring in the names of all the divines of the university of Bologna whom he knew, whether they were tarrying in the town, or not. As there were comparatively few at this determination, although those who dwell outside Bologna scarcely ever come to the town, he challenged Pallavicinus and other fathers, so that they were in marvellous fear. One friar, however, answered him boldly, that he had acted according to his conscience, and that his opinion was true and catholic. Has spoken with six of them, who are singularly learned, and, if the matter come to reasoning, will stand for twenty. Has spoken so roundly to the governor, that he pretended he had not done it of any evil intent. Told the bishop of London what he said to the governor. Came to him last night in post from Bologna, and wrote this letter in haste. Wrote of all other things on 7 Sept. Rhegio, 9 Sept.

6610. MAI to CHARLES V.

Was told by the Pope the other day that the English wished to prorogue the cause. Thinks he rather approved of that course himself. Mai said he had no opinion, but was commanded to go on. The Pope said they wished the affair to be remitted to a place free from suspicion. Mai said this was not in his commission; although even the Imperialists did not think Rome a place free from suspicion, were it not for his Holiness, considering the sums of money spent by the English, and that he had heard that cardinal Trani, who is not a lawyer nor of much authority, had been offered 10,000 ducats of rent to favor the king of England's cause. I read the Queen's letters to his Holiness, and, telling him he could not do less, gave him a memorial of that which we demand. Was referred by the Pope to St. Quatuor, with whom he had a long conversation. At last the Pope agreed to a part of their demand, saying as to the rest he would wait the coming of cardinal Ancona two days hence. The bishop of London has been recalled by the King. It is said the bishop of Bayonne, who was to have come here, has gone to England. Rome, 11 Sept. 1530.

R. O. Records of the Reformation, I. 421.

Andrew de Casalis has got for the King a confirmation by the college of Bologna of their former act, and would have procured all the learned members of the university to write. The bishop of London tells Croke that Cassalis will promote it all he can, and he has given him 1,600 cr. Is glad of this, because they could not have done so much without it. Notwithstanding, there is now a great stop, for the governor knows everything that is done, and has cited every one of the friars and some of the doctors of law, as Andrew tells him, and he saw himself, when Jerome Previdellus was with the governor. This will prevent Mr. Andrew from doing so much, but Croke hopes he will do well. Asks Cranmer to solicit the bishop of Worcester earnestly for three transumpts of the brief under his seal, without which no good can be done here, as there is universal fear. Asks him to send them to him at Venice by father Francis, who is, as far as he can perceive, a sure friend of the King's cause. Bologna, 12 Sept.

Add. MS. 28,581, f. 126. B. M. From a letter of baron dal Borgho, of 16 Sept. 1530.

On requesting the king of England to assist for his part against the Turk, he replied he did not believe the Turk was going to do such serious mischief. Reports the complaints made by the King against the Pope, which he endeavored to answer, viz., of having revoked the legates, and committed the cause to the Rota,—of the inhibition "mandata in mano della regina;" and that unless the case were committed to the archbishop of Canterbury, or to the Church of England, he was determined to go on, for he knew his Holiness had promised the Emperor to give sentence in favor of the Queen. Proposed to the King that two judges be elected by him, and two by the Queen. The King was not satisfied with this, and on Borgho proposing that his Holiness should choose a fifth, the King said if it came to that, he would prefer the fifth to be elected by the French king, who was related to the Emperor, and a friend to himself, but he could not agree that the cause should be judged out of the kingdom. This discussion was prolonged almost until night, and they were beginning to talk about other matters, when the King desired him to speak with the duke of Norfolk and Dr. Steven. On doing so, the Duke professed himself devoted to the Holy See; but said that where the King had distinctly declared his will for one thing more than another, he must support his Majesty, and that the King would never consent that the cause should be judged outside the kingdom. The King afterwards told him the same, and said he had prorogued the diet that was to take place in England on the 2nd October for 20 days longer, during which, if no answer came, he would act for himself.

On the subject of the Florentines he said he had already written in their favor. He does not wish to have an English cardinal, but recommends the Auditor and Casale. The writer thinks his Holiness should not desist from proceeding in the cause, if the King should promise not to proceed without him. The duke of Norfolk, though he did not say it in the name of the King, said he would lay his life upon it, that his Majesty would not proceed if nothing was done at Rome. "Et che questo sia secretissimo che forse si potria fare una suspension perpetuamente con disdetto de uno anno o sei mesi innanzi quum una parte non volesse stare a la suspensione." The King did not approve of the matter being remitted to the General Council. He will endeavor to arrange an interview of the King and the Emperor, and get the former to agree that the cause be committed to the Rota. He hears the King has asked that the duke of Orleans should go into Flanders under color of matrimony, &c.

16 Sept. 6619. CROKE to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
Records of the Reformation, I. 423.

Fourteen hours after the bishop of London departed, the governor of Bologna knew everything that he had said or done in the King's cause, and told Croke that there were only seven friars at the first determination, and five at the last. He recited certain secret arguments in favor of the Levitical law against Deuteronomy. He knew that the bishop of London had left with Sir Andrew de Cassalis and Previdellus 1,600 cr.; and also of the books and bills left with Previdellus, who also told Croke that the governor knew of this. Sir Andrew told him that the governor had a copy of the last determination, and he had himself shown Croke a copy of the first. No one had copies of the determinations or transumpts, but the notaries, Pallavicinus, Sir Andrew, Sir Gregory, Previdellus, and some of the college.

Those of the college, the notaries and Pallavicinus, swore it was not by them; and the governor swore that Pallavicinus swore true, saying that it was one of five who wrote in the King's favor that brought him the copy. The fathers and notaries thereupon swore also, and desired Croke to tell the governor that they would swear before his face, and if he would not call them to do so, to show him their subscriptions on oath. No one could tell of the money and bills left with Previdellus, but he, Sir Andrew, and Pallavicinus. The governor told Croke that Previdellus had told him of the arguments, and that he had seen Previdellus' counsel. No one knew what lawyers had written for the King, but the Cassalis and Previdellus, who is the governor'schief friend in Bologna, and heard the examination when the friars and doctors were cited. Both he and Sir Andrew blamed the notary and Pallavicinus, and said that the determination that the governor had was in the hand of the latter; but before his face, he denied it, and would have put the fault upon friar Nicolas, a learned man, and the King's faithful favorer. Could not get Sir Andrew to hear Pallavicinus' purgation. After telling Croke how the governor had cited the notaries, &c., and had been angry with him for refusing to tell what the bishop of London had done, he began to complain of his evil manner, calling him a subtle and false lying man, and begged Croke not to believe him if he said that it was he (Sir Andrew) who had given him the copy or any information. This made Croke desire Sir Andrew to come with him to the governor, but he would not enter his chamber. Both he and Previdellus seemed much alarmed when they heard that Pallavicinus would swear to the governor's face. Doubts not that it was they who uttered the King's secrets to the governor; partly because they had promised the bishop of London to get the determination of the whole college of lawyers at Bologna, and did not dare to attempt it, because of the Pope, they thought by craft to hinder it, and pick a thank of his Holiness; or else, finding that they could not do it, they caused the governor to do this, that they might be quit of their promise, and keep the King's money. Is not surprised at this, if what the Prothonotary said is true, that certain of the King's ambassadors advise him to hinder this matter as much as he can; which advice he has diligently followed. The bishop of London found in the Prothonotary's table an extract from the King's book, with this title, Hæc sunt quæ adducunt opinatores veritatis, by which extract the counsel sent by Cranmer was made. Got from the bishop of London this extract and Sir Gregory de Cassali's letter about the embezzling of the determination of England; "and how the prothonotary said to Marcus Janua, the which said to my lord of London, Quod pœnituisset ipsum subscripsisse operi Francisci,' the which is in your Highness's hand, 'pœnitet etiam Franciscum;' and how he answered the Emperor's ambassador, 'Non me impacchio,' saying unto him, 'Quando vultis jugulare inter vos illam probissimam dominam;" and how he knew what was in the King's letters to the Pope concerning the brief and the restoration of the names burnt by the bishop of Vaison before the said letters came to Rome, which were sent in the packet to the bishop of London which was opened by Sir Andrew, Croke commits to the Bishop's report.

Fears that the 400 cr. delivered to the Prothonotary will do rather harm than good, especially as Croke neither has his full diets nor any money to retain or confirm persons. Sends by Cranmer the names of those already retained. Bologna, 16 Sept.

On the reports mentioned in his other letter, made by Sir Andrew de Cassalis of the governor of Bologna, went to the governor. Told him he was the King's servant, sent with the bishop of London to ascertain the opinions of learned men in the King's cause; that he and all others had strict orders, upon pain of life, to use no sinister means, nor to move any one, prece, pretio, aut spe præmii, to favor his cause, but only to exhort them to speak according to their learnihg and conscience, as they would answer before God. Considering that the Pope by his brief had given the same charge, and that the Bishop, Croke, and all others who had meddled in the cause, were quite sure that nothing had escaped them in transgression of the brief or the King's order, he was surprised that the governor, from illwill to the King, should, contrary to the Pope's will, try to deface the truth by threatening and frightening those who had determined on the King's side. Begged him to consider what he had done, for, seeing that he was of great authority and of the Pope's counsel, it would not be thought that he would have taken upon him to meddle between the King and the Emperor, in favor of the former, except from secret knowledge of the Pope's pleasure; and Croke prayed that his act might not cause the King to doubt the Pope's faith, or cause some great break between his Holiness and the King.

To this the governor answered that he had not done it by the Pope's advice or order, nor from any illwill to the King, but to avoid the blame of negligence which he would have incurred by allowing such an open act as the determination of a whole college, within his governance. Said the determination of schools could neither advance nor "appeare" the common weal, and he knew not why "he should make such a ruffling to know . . . . . unless but to put men in fear, and to hurt your Highness' [cause; and] that I told him not that of guess but of experience. To this [he answered] that your Highness had bound him to farther† right dimisse his lawful wife and marry another against . . . . . mind and will, whom, as ye said, ye were sure that he wol . . . . . sentence in this cause; the which words ye have spoken to . . . . . that they cannot be denied, and I am glad that I may re[fer to his Holiness] for author of the same, for now need to doubt no fur[ther] that that ye have done is done as ye said, ex officio, that is . . . . ex mandato pontificis, et ex odio tam pontificis quam tuo in regem, b[ut] your displeasure the King's highness will count light of, and . . . . . as ye are but a servant, and must obey the commandment [of your] master, the King's quarrel must be against your master, th[e which] forgetting all the continual and infinite kindness of the King[s highness] toward his Holiness can be content for his goodness secrea[tly to thwart] his said Highness; and I am afraid that this unkind beha[viour] shall cause orators of the Pope not only to have less creden[ce but] to fear the worst at his Highness' hand; that if his Hig[hness take] this your act as he ought to take it, I doubt not but not [only the] Pope, but also the Church of Rome, shall have great cause to curse the time that ye were born."

At these words he trembled, asked how he could know the Pope's mind, being so far off, and offered to clear himself by summoning all with whom he had [spoken], and causing them to repeat what he had said on oath. Replied that he, as the King's servant, dared not judge the Pope's vice-legate, but he hoped that he would reverse his previous exhortation to the lawyers not to undertake the King's cause. He answered gently that it became Croke, as the agent of so [great a] prince, to hear the purgation of any whc had offended him, and he would summon the chief doctors in law of Bologna, and show them that not only he but also the Pope would be very glad for them to speak and write the best they could for the King and all others privately. Asked him, "quid communiter et collegialiter?" He said that they might do it collegialiter, if they spoke reverently of the Pope's power, which he would see them do, "and farther so that they . . . . . .

17 Sept. 6623. CROKE to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Records of the Reformation, I. 427.

Cranmer and Croke were yesterday with the governor, and prevailed on him to perform today what he promised yesterday. He sent for the chief doctors of law in Bologna, of whom only one came, and desired him on their behalf to assemble the college, and to determine for the king of England what seemed to them in accordance with justice and truth; he wished only that the college should not be summoned unknown to him, and that honorable words should be used of the Papal power; but if such words could not be used without making the determination weaker, or injuring the King's cause, he wished them to abstain from saying anything of the kind. Assures the King that the governor would be glad to do him pleasure, without offence to the Pope. His conduct for three days in the King's cause makes Croke think that the words he before spoke were by the provocation of some other.

Dr. Gozadinus, who is retained for the King, promised to make the college determine in the speediest and best fashion that they could. Bologna, 17 Sept.

Vit. B. XIII. 114. B. M.

The g[overnor told Croke] of the numbers which were at the first and second determinations, and of every word that was spoken by Stokesley, as well at dinner as . . . . . both times that he was here; what money he left for the [King's cause]; his arguments and probations for the Levitical law, and [the argu]mente he recited to Croke de substantia Deuteronomii apud . . . . . Could not tell what he meant, nor how he formed it, nor to what end. Asks Stokesley to send a solution, that he may answer if it is objected to him. He knew what books Stokesley had left with Prævidellus to be g[iven to] Pallavicinus. Prævidellus tells him that the governor asked . . . . . them. Sir Andrew tells him that the governor had a copy [of the] last original. Pallavicinus swore "that he se . . . . . quondam episcopi Laudensis of the other transumpts." Doubts not that the governor has a copy of everything. The notary, Sir [Andrew], and Prævidellus say that Pallavicinus showed them to him, and that the copy was in his hand; but, before Pallavicinus, Sir Andrew denied it. Though he had used arguments to prove to Croke that it was Pallavicinus that showed the m[atter], when Pallavicinus asked him to go with him to see his purgation [before] the governor, Sir Andrew said that the matter did not pertain [to him], and he did not doubt him. dellus' counsel, and has sent for every doc[tor] that wrote for us. No one in Bologna is so privy with the g[overnor] as Previdellus. All Lady Day he was with the governor [at] the examination of the friars, and excused to Croke the governor's . . . . . Both he and Sir Andrew are out of counten[ance, and] stagger and tremble in their tales when Croke talks with them. Dares to say that it was one or both of them that caused the gover[nor to act] as he did; for Pallavicinus has sworn, as Mr. Cranmer shall sh[ow you] of his own hand before the governor, who also put his hand upon the Gospel, and swore that Pallav[icinus had] sworn true. "And for because that the governor said to m[e] . . . . . Andrew's report the said governor had afore said to him . . . . . say that it was one of the five that wrote for us * * * to pray him that they might all come afore him and swear [a] declaration of their integrity and honesty in this behalf, that if he would not grant that (as he would not), that I should show him their hands and subscriptions." Perceives that the difficulty which the governor made, and the words which he spoke, came of another rather than of himself, viz., from Mr. Cranmer. Has so handled him that he is content to suffer the college to be assembled, and neither to be present himself nor prescribe how the college shall determine, but only desires them to show him their determination when it is made. He offered to tell this openly to the chief of the doctors in Croke's presence, and desired him to send for whom he pleased. Asked Sir Andrew de Cassalis and Previdellus who were the chief of the college? They said Godzedinus and Augustin Barow, but they could not be found at home. The governor has written to the duke of Norfolk that he will do all that he has promised. When Cassalis was told of the governor's doing, he said that letters had come from Sir Gregory at Rome;—which is untrue, "but thus they will pick thank." Cranmer says that it was written from Venice to Rome that Stokesley had marred all the King's matters there. Sir Andrew has been at Ferrara, and our matters are marred there, and no man has yet been sent thither. Pallavicinus has been going every day for a week, but has not gone. Martius Tullius came hither on Wednesday to find out when Stokesley would leave Bologna. The horse that Carre sent was marred before he came from Rome. Would have sent him a copy of his letter to the King, if he had time. The governor has in his letters named no number.

a day. But the Cardinal assured me, whatever speed they made in the process, the sentence would be put off, as the Holy See never did anything in a hurry, and reasons would be given to the Imperialists why it should not be passed; moreover he had never known a cause in which more doubt existed, and the Pope could never give sentence until the matter had been thoroughly discussed, else he was liable to be called to a Council. I answered that the King could not prove his opinion better than by showing those of learned men throughout Christendom; and as to the cause being doubtful, it was to be feared the benefit of the doubt would be given to the Emperor on account of the affair with the duke of Ferrara. The Cardinal said, as to my first remark, the Imperialists also might get opinions of universities; and as to the second, before sentence was passed, the Pope would be free from all these private influences.

23 Sept. 6633. STOKESLEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Your letters of the 16 Aug. were delivered to me at Venice on the St. P. VII. 253. 29th, when both Croke and the prothonotary De Casalis were at Padua. On my writing, Croke returned to me on Wednesday the 30th; but the Prothonotary, "because of the honoring of the commencement of his great friend," Stampa, could not come till Thursday, the 1st inst. Was thus forced to tarry so long in Venice, but came to Bologna on Saturday; where, as the two famous doctors, Beroo and Gozadinus, were absent, he remained till the 7th. Meanwhile, in consequence of slanderous rumors spread at Padua by a Spanish canon sent by the Emperor's ambassadors, "I renewed the first determination of the theologians there, in the presence of the notary of that faculty and of other credible witnesses." I also conferred with those doctors of law that were at home, and had promised to defend your cause; but only one, Dr. Hieronymus Prevatillus, had performed his writing. Dr. Ochi excused himself by business in pursuing the murderers of his brother. Dr. Ja. de Fastenninis, who was reader to Dr. Benet, said he had not finished his study of the question de indispensabilitate; though, on the other two parts, viz., de jure Dominico et insufficientia causæ, and in the question de integritate, he had come to the same conclusion with others. Dr. Hieronymus has no doubt he will in the end agree on all points. All have promised to give in their opinions by the end of September to Sir Andrea de Casali or to Sir Gregory if he return thither, so that your counsel may have them at Rome by the beginning of next month, and your Grace by the end thereof. That of Hieronymo should be already at Rome, according to the arrangement Stokesley made at Bologna, with two authentic copies of the determinations of Bologna and Padua, and two others that I got at Venice to send to the ambassadors at Rome, though none of them has written to me a word since Guron's arrival there on the 20th Aug.

These five doctors are the best in Italy, and they have no doubt of getting the rest of that university to subscribe. One of the body, De Pinu, has at our request shown us an opinion of his own. He and others promise to do their best, and there is no fear of our success, unless Gambara, the governor of Bologna, interfere; of whom I wrote at Whitsuntide, and who on Our Lady day last, viz., the day after I left Bologna, "made a shameful ruffle with some of the theologians for their determinations," as your Highness will see by a letter of Mr. Croke and one of Dr. Pallavicinus sent herewith. As to Venice and Padua, I trust you are by this time informed by my letter and Croke's and by your ambassadors there.

There is little hope of getting a new "collegial determination" at Padua, but we have devised a way to obtain from the best part of them a confirmation of their first decision with a more perfect declaration of what the King desires. Has left this to Croke. At the first impetration thereof showed Leonicus and Symoneta the original of Bologna, desiring that there might be the same in substance, though the preface might be made more eloquent. Afterwards sent Croke to Padua with the original of Bologna for the same purpose; but he, trusting to Symoneta, never desired to see the form of their determination, till father Ambrosius brought it to him ready sealed and subscribed. When I saw it I sent Croke back to get some things reformed, but the Emperor's ambassador, hearing of it, caused father Ambrosius to be called before the Duke, and put him in fear to meddle.

The three lawyers at Padua retained for the King had no instructions at Midsummer, but, being instructed by me in the end of July, promised to study therefor. They had not made up their minds when I left Venice. Petrus Paulus Perusius, the chief of them, has given me some hope that he will decide in our favor; the other two wait for him. Has left money with the ambassador at Venice for their rewards. The theologians of Bologna are so well affected to the King they will take no reward, "sed quod a Spiritu Sancto gratis acceperunt, gratis et libenter impertiunt." Services promised by friars Baptista Pallavicinus, Franciscus de Cremona, and Bartolomeus, a Grey Friar of Venice. Friar Pallavicinus declined money for his costs. Friar Sancte Pagnino was told by the bishop of Faventia, when he passed through Lyons to congratulate Francis in the Pope's name on the liberation of his children, that the Pope wished him to come to Rome;—perhaps for the same cause as he sent for friar Francis Georgius. Hears the Emperor and the French king are to meet soon after his descent into Flanders.

In going over Mount Agabellet on Sunday, met the duke of Albany going with threescore horse to fetch his niece from Florence, to be married in France, as is pretended. Sends the original instruments of Bologna and Padua with the new ratification of the former. Would have sent them before but for the strict search of couriers made by the governor of Aste, who lately stopped 10,000 crowns sent from here to Sienna. This courier should be at Calais on Monday night. Will depart homewards myself tomorrow. Lyons, 23 Sept. Signed.

He is to pay the greatest attention to this subject, and continually to report what is going on. He has gone to Bologna, with the intention to procure there also similar opinions; and it is stated that he has, in fact, already obtained some.

25 Sept. 6637. STOKESLEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O. St. P. VII. 259.

Alexander, the courier, on his journey to Rome, met here tonight with Francis Piemont going to England. The latter brought me a letter from Benet, who says he wrote to me on the 22nd, enclosing a letter from you. I have not received them. Benet speaks of the insufficiency of the transumpts that I sent him from Venice, for lack of ordinary power in the bishop of Loode, who put his seal to them. But there was no ordinary that durst meddle with your cause; therefore at Bologna I prepared two new [transumpts?] to be sent to Rome under the vicar of Bologna's seal, before Gambara made this ruffling with divines and lawyers; which to reform, Sir Gregory, on my writing to him from Regia, now comes down with a mandate from the Pope himself. His Holiness is discontented with the governor on account of it. When I was last at Bologna, Gambara inquired of Sir Andrea de Casalis about all my motions, and reported them to the Emperor. Doubts not Sir Andrea has reported to the King all that he has written to Stokesley of the Pope's study and opinion as to the prohibition being divine, of the invalidity of the two decretals, Cum olim and Inter divinas†, of the lack of the books of Wiclef, and of the counsels of Decius and Picolominus. Francis Georgius has not recovered of his sickness, and has lost one eye, and is likely to lose the other. Sir Andrea no longer suspects him, as the Pope, he thinks, has been brought by him to agree to that first point. To the second, De Indispensabilitate, he believes they will never assent; and to the third, De Insufficientia causæ in Bulla sive Brevi expressæ, they will have few contradictors.

27 Sept. 6638. CLEMENT VII. to the ENGLISH NOBILITY.

R. O. Herbert, p. 144.

Has received their letter of 13 July. Acknowledges the merits of the King as stated by them. So far from denying the King's justice, has been thought too partial to him. When the cause was first laid before him three years ago, submitted the determination of it to Wolsey and Campeggio; but as the Queen suspected them of partiality and appealed to Rome, could not refuse her request. No proctor has as yet appeared on the King's behalf, and therefore any delay in the determination of the cause should not be ascribed to the Pope. Besides, the King's ambassadors at Bologna solicited this delay, and therefore their complaints are groundless. Criticises their remarks about the universities, and justifies the papal proceedings in respect of the marriage. Whatever the Pope's obligations to the King, must proceed according to justice. As to the deluge of calamities apprehended by them, thinks that it would be much greater if he neglected his duty, and departed from the rules of justice. As to their menace that unless their request is granted, they will be left to take the care of themselves into their own hands, and seek the remedy elsewhere, protests that this is a resolution unworthy of them, and is not sanctioned by the King. Has always shown the greatest desire to comply with the King's requests, when it could be done consistently with justice. Rome, 27 Sept. 1530.

Vit. B. XIII. 115. B. M.

Tarried at Ferrara upon the . . . . . of Pallavicinus, from 18 to 24 Sept. As he did not come, tried to obtain the seal of the college. Had spoken at first to Francis de Marona, but could obtain nothing from him [till the] 23rd. He said he could do nothing till the return of the doctor Hierome; that he was not of our opinion, and would not follow Stokesley's form, but devised one himself: to [which] Croke added some things "by entreance of him," and was fain to give [him] . . . . . crowns. He then said it could no[t be done] but with licence of the vicar-general of cardinal Salviatis† . . . . bishop of Ferrara and chancellor of the university. Accordingly gave the vicar money, and the college and all other doctors of divinity in Ferrara were assembled, and the instrument published and made; which Croke sends to the King. Pallavicinus has not come yet. Tarries here for the se . . . . . the lawyers, who are more than 30. Tr[usts] to obtain them by Cœlius, whom Croke has marvellously converted to his old pro . . . . . the opinion that card. Campegius, by Florianus and other, had . . . . . in." All Ferrara was full of [Croke's] coming before he came, and therefore the lawyers ask 200 cr. for their determination, seal and counsel. Has more than half a promise from . . . . . to write for us, unless his feeble health prevent him. * * *

After Cranmer and Croke had obtained leave from the governor to bid Gozadinus assemble the college and determine, "and if he could not use no reverent words of the Pope's power, but to detriment of the King's cause, that he should cause the college in any wise to leave out such words," was assured by Gozadinus that the governor was very faithful to the King, and exhorted him to promote the cause. Gozadinus told him that in eight days he would assemble the college, and he therefore went to Hierom and Sir Andrew. The latter, however, had been told by Mr. Cranmer, and "full gently gat him out of town." Hierom was not glad of the tidings, and excused Sir Andrew's departure, a wench having fallen sick of the sickness in his house; but a few days before they both told him that their wives had gone into the country for the same reason; but when he wished to leave the house, they restrained him, and said it was not so. Friar Vincentius had delivered to Cœlius at Ferrara, before Croke's coming, all the books which Croke had given him,—a dangerous thing, as Cœlius was somewhat alienated. Expostulated with the friar, who asked if he thought Gregory or Andrew wished to promote this cause, saying he knew many things, but could not speak of them. He was vexed with Gregory for having sent him to friar Fanto, our utter enemy, which Gregory knew well enough.

Hopes Stokesley has not causelessly mistrusted him (Croke), and trusted others, to the King's hindrance. "I would not have thought that by me these words could have come out of your mouth, videte ut quam possitis maxime causam promoveatis, ne hic nebulo habeat quod conqueratur apud regem." Will so order himself that Stokesley will have no cause to think he has said well. Hopes by his good demeanor to make him sorry for his suspicions and sinister judgments. Lacks money, and does not know where to get any. Stokesley's horse is worse every day. Has kept him a month, and had a smith to see him daily. [Would] have sold him, but the smith nor no man else [would give] . . . . . ducats for him. Asks him to aid him, for [he has] great need as well of the said 20 ducats as of [more]. Ferrara, 28 Se[pt.]

6641. CROKE to HENRY VIII.

Obtained the determination of Ferrara in good and sure form, and by means of Cœlius Calchagninus attempted the college of lawyers, 72 in number. Would have had that night a counsel for the King, sealed and signed by all, and a determination under the seal of the college, if he could have laid down 150 cr. Not having this sum, tried to make them take a less price, and feigned the case to be his own. Meantime the notary asked his servant in his name for the instrument to put thereto his legality. On returning home, showed his displeasure at this to the notary's servant, who said that if it had not been given up, it would have been forcibly taken away. Sent afterwards to the notary, who asked pardon, as he had done it by orders of the Duke's factor, who bade him go with soldiers and take it by force if Croke would not give it up. Went to the factor, who said the friars themselves showed him of this matter, naming Vincentius Placentinus, a Black friar. This friar showed Croke divers books of the King, which he said were given to him by the bishop of London; but Croke now has discovered that Sir Gregory gave him the book, and sent him round Italy, and he is not likely to have done the King any good. When called to this counsel, he said that his chapter had prohibited speaking of the Pope's power. Pallavicinus, however, made him confess that if it had been so, as it was not, it could not have restrained his good will. He hinted at the danger of speaking of the Pope's power, so that he almost marred everything, and, when the act of Bologna was alleged, said that there were very few there, and those scant learned. Notwithstanding, in Croke's presence, he determined upon the instrument of which the copy is enclosed, sealed by the vicar-general, who is deputy to the card. De Salviatis, chancellor of the university.

Paid the vicar and college for their assemblance. The factor commanded the friars to say that they did not consent to the instrument, and some of them bade the notary return it. Could not get the factor to order the notary to deliver the instrument to him, although he had paid for it. Besides, he had so handled the doctors of law, that although Croke offered 100 cr. instead of from 20 to 60, as before, they answered that they would give no counsel but by consent of both parties, the King and the Queen. Had never mentioned the name of either. Florianus, Campeggio's secretary, resides in Ferrara, never ceases to slander the King's cause, and is great with the factor. Is ashamed of the false dealing of the Italians. Finds great difficulty in consequence of the many friars opposed to the King, who know his arguments, and of the many copies of the King's book and others in his favor.

6642. THOMAS OMNIBONUS, Prior of the Convent of SS. John and Paul, Venice, to [HENRY VIII.]

Promised in previous letters to undertake his cause. Has obtained 32 subscriptions. On the 3rd inst., the Imperial ambassador came to him and told him that it was not the part of a religious man to take up a dangerous and scandalous matter, and showed that he knew the whole of Omnibonus' letter to the King. He said that it would be better for Omnibonus to agree with the canonists and theologians, whose opinions were opposite to his; spoke of the wars which a divorce would create, the Queen's blameless life, and the marriage of K. Emmanuel; told him that the matter was committed to six cardinals by the Pope, who would never displease the Emperor, and advised him to take care of his own safety and honor. Replied that he was consulted on a matrimonial case by an Englishman, whom he took to be a German, and gave him an opinion, knowing nothing about the King or Queen,—which, as a professor of theology, he was bound to do; had not changed his opinion, but was not so addicted to it that he would not change it in deference to Scripture; if the Queen was holy, she would prefer the safety of her soul to earthly gain; had taken enough care for his own safety, if he spoke the truth.

The general of their Order has forbidden them to speak of the Pope's authority. Paul de Casalis tells him that he (the general) has sent a copy of his writings to the Pope, and that the Imperial ambassador wishes the Pope to cite him. Asks the King's assistance, to deliver him from these straits.

29 Sept. 6643. [CROKE] to CRANMER.

Vit. B. XIII. 118. B. M.

Had obtained the dete[rmination] of the college of divines at Ferrara, and was [promised] to have that of the lawyers, but had no money to [pay] what they asked. Tells him how the factor took away the instrument from him, and the saying of the Black Friar about Gregory de Cassalis, who, he says, gives one order publicly, and another privately. "Notwithstanding this Friar said in . . . . . when the determination of Bologna was showed that h[e thinketh] that there were few learned men in the college, and he wol . . . . . but said os suum was clausum, and that periculosa [quæstio] ista de potestate pontificis; by the which words if Fran[ciscus de] Cremona had not been, whom Sir Gregory had mou[ed] . . . . for the King, and Sir Andrew also. But for all that . . . . . and made him the King's surely, first by persuasion, by r[eason] afterward by reward. But I cannot tell how these m[atters] were handled, but the governor knew of [my] coming . . . . or I came, and had given commandment to the prior o[f the Black] Friars if there were any determination made, not den[ying that] he knew more. And farther, when I had the instrum[ent, he bade the] notary to get it out of my hand by some craft, [and if] I would not deliver it to take some of the soldiers bei[ng] . . . and to take it from me by strength, he had also the p . . . . that they did not consent to the same, and forbade the d[octors of] law to determine. And when I spake to him to comman[d the] notary to deliver the instrument, and to suffer . . . . lawyers to be at liberty, he made me answer that [he would] nother let me ne proferre the cause, nor he would . . . . . te notary to deliver the instrument, but said, Nolo [me impachiare]. And this is the good that cometh to the King [of such friars]. And Sir Andrew, as soon as ye were gone, got hy[m away] because he would solicit no man in the King's [cause]." 29 Sept.

The Prothonotary has done no good. The chief doctors of Padua, as Parrisius and Curtius, now will not counsel under 100 angelots. Cranmer will see by the letter that Parrisius favors our cause, and that the let comes from the Prothonotary alone.

29 Sept. 6644. [CROKE to STOKESLEY.]

Vit. B. XIII. 116. B. M.

[Supposes] Cranmer has told him what pranks were played on him (Stokesley) at Bologna, and that he would not have had a determination that would have availed the King, unless Croke had spoken to the gov[ernor]. Gives an account of his interview with Gozadinus and Sir Andrew's absence, as in the letter to Stokesley, 28 Sept. On 17 Sept., Pallavicinus was [here] and then departed to Novellaria, promising Croke to [be at] Ferrara on Tuesday next. Went to Ferrara on S . . . . . of Sept., and stayed till Saturday follo[wing, but did not] hear of Pallavicinus. Franciscus de Cre-[mona] * * * determination of Ferrara under these words devised . . . . . him. At this determination there were five of the college and four others, one being Vicentius Placentinus to whom Stokesley took certain books, as Consilium Hieronymi, Chrysostomi de Cassalis† and Basil's epistles, with other things, to go about Italy and procure friends; and who says that he caused Rhomanus to translate Basil's epistle to Stokesley, and is a little learned in Greek. He went to the factor, said that he did not consent to the deed, and caused him to summon the others, and charge them to deny that it was their deed. Being told that the instrument was in Croke's possession, and passed publicly before the Chancellor and witnesses, the factor sent the notary in Croke's name to his servant during his absence, to say that Croke ordered him to deliver it to him, to get the legality of the notary. Was displeased, and sent for it again; but the notary said the factor had ordered him to retain it, and if it had not been given him, he had orders to take soldiers, and get it by force. Went today to Cœlius, who had obtained a promise from the college of lawyers, 62 in number, that if Croke would deposit 150 cr. they would give their determination and make a substantial counsel in the King's cause. Was told by him that the factor had commanded them to say that they would give no counsel but with the consent of the King, the Queen, and the Emperor. Has asked the factor to return the instrument, but he denies everything, saying "Non volo me impachiare." This is the good that [comes of] Stokesley trusting such friars as these. Cœ[lius says] that Florianus, Campegius' secretary, has also set [himself to] hurt and hinder the matter all that he can. This friar confessed that he was sent to Friar F . . . . . [by Sir] Gregory, who is the King's utter enemy. Pallavicinus says that he now came from Mantua, the 29th . . . . . month. Doubts sore of a[ll that be]long to Cassalis. The Black Friar Vicentius asked him if he thought Gregory wished this matter to proceed, and stopped saying he knew much but . . . . . His horse is past recovery, and now will not stir a foot. [No one] here will give a ducat for him. Ferrara, 29 [Sept.]

After writing this, Augustin de Philibertis was sent hither by the Prothonotary, and lodged with Vincent, his kins[man] Dominico . . . . . The friar Augustin had lett[ers and] divers books for Croke and others in Ferrara; but when Croke went to him, he said he had none, having delivered them to Francis [de] Cremona; but he also had nothing but a letter of credence from the Prothonotary for Augustine. Augustine "told him that . . . . . the instrument of Ferrare came from Venice by the Emperor's ambass[ador, and] that the said ambassador, peradventure, had written to the factor . . . . . of Ferrara of such things as had been done in Venice . . . . . and bade him beware lest any such thing were practised . . . . . But the governor told me that the friars them self procur[ed an order] for the let of the instrument. Alas, my Lord, that he w . . . . . Cassalis with anything that I would and practised in . . . . . cause." He has made a consultation in the King's causes, and for fear of let by the resort of any of our persons, "had also advised the Prothonotary to come in any of the said places." As for books, he said the Prothonotary had only delivered him the bare case, with no money, nor anything else. He said that Curta will not counsel under 100 angelotts. He has been to persuade Hanibal and friar Thomas to say that what they had done was by his suit, and neither Croke's nor Stokesley's. This is their goodness touching the King's causes. It does not become him to rehearse the railing of him and his servants against Stkoesley, and their boast that they sent him back his 10 cr. Vincent was before Whitsuntide sent about by Sir Gregory, from whom he had these books, one of which Croke now has, a book lacking the beginning and end, and entitled in Stokesley's hand, Contra Wykefflystas Rationes Nicolai. These two were written by Perceval, Mr. Fox's servant. He had also written in the hands of Nicholas, Sir Gregory's servant, and of the Prothonotary's servant, Basil's epistle, in Stokesley's translation, Chrysostom's reasons against objections to his work, a collection of authorities for our part, St. Gregory's epistle, "Raphael werke," and almost all Crucinus' counsel, marked Consilium fratris Thomæ Omniboni cum sex subscriptionibus, which no one had from Croke, except Stokesley and Cranmer, and which Hierom Previdellus, by Stokesley's order, saw. Matters at Padua are all marred. If Stokesley will not believe him, he will believe the copy of Parrisius' letter sent to Hannibal, who is going to Rome, and will be one of the Rota. Hannibal has written as Stokesley wished. The letter will show what the Prothonotary has done at Padua. The vicar of the bishop of Verona has gone to . . . . . Has no money. Has delivered

Examination of William Harlokke, 30 Sept. 22 Hen. VIII., in the Tower of London, before Sir Edmund Walsingham and Sir John Daunce.

Acknowledges his former confession to be true. Had lived with Dr. Austyn, "a doctor of physic and astronomer," who died at Colchester in 13 Hen. VIII. Had of him "a kalendre of profysye wherein there were pictures of kings and lords armes," which he showed to one Byrte of White Staunton, Somst. Part of its contents Byrte interpreted as deponent has already explained. He also said by the pictures in the same there should be a great battle of priests, but did not say at what time. Showed the kalendar to Byrte in Easter week was twelvemonth, when he said there should be, three years following the year 1530, much trouble and business, but when, he could not tell. It was reported in Somersetshire that he had a kalendar of prophecy, and Sir Nich. Wadham threatened to punish him if he used it any more; on which he promised to burn it, but did not. Showed it a year ago to Richard Loweth, a goldsmith at Taunton, telling him that part was of the dreadful dragon; when the latter said his book showed the same, and that the dragon should land with the bare-legged hens. Loweth explained the dreadful dragon to be the earl of Desmond, and the lion gentle, the king of Scots. He said that at Sandyngford haven should land a courteous knight and pitch his banner in a stone on the right hand, when a blue boar should give him battle till they do sweat and foam. He also showed him many prophecies written in Welsh in a black book.

One John Barbour, dwelling in Norwich beside the Mayden Hedde, has a book of prophecies, which he read to this deponent in presence of Sir William, chaplain to Mr. Halse, Roger Coper, and one Robert, a worsted weaver, who married a widow in Norwich. On deponent saying afterwards to Sir William that it was a marvellous book, the latter said he could tell him of one that surpassed it, but he must keep it secret. "And thanne the said Sir William said, I have redde in a boke of profycie of Mr. Hals that alle profycyes that ben past I have found them true, and that by that boke, for my hedd, the kinges Grace shuld not [leve]* obteigne above thre yere. These words were spoken two years past come All Saints' day; and after the said Sir William had accusyd thys deponent for dyggynge for money, then thys deponent accusyd the said Sir William of hys profycyinge unto Henry Fuller, and one Cranke, then beinge shryfes of Norwiche; and the same shrefes herynge the mater, askyd the said Sir William, why dyd ye speke suche wordes? Then the said Sir William denyed not the wordes, but that he spake them to thys deponent to th'entent to know whether he had any bokes of profycie or not. And thene the said Henry Fuller said, Thys ys but a tryffyllinge mater to come before the Kinge."

"Item, this deponent saith that [one Thomas Larke, of Myldenale in Suffolk, came to the Tabberd in Suthwerke to Sir William Larke†], Richard Jones and one Lloid, of Appysham in Devonshyre, shewyd them that the Whytte Lyon in the yere of our Lorde God MDXXXJ. shuld kylle a kinge in Englond, whiche said Sir William Larke supposyd to be the kinge of Denmarke. And more the seyd deponent cannot call to his remembrance."

6655. THE DIVORCE.

Add. MS. 28,581, f. 199. B. M.

"Memorial de algunas cartas que se habian de escribir a differentes personas sobre el matrimonio de la reyna de Inglaterra."

The points (apuntamientos) to be written to Micer Mai are as follows: 1. That in the original agreement of the king of England (Henry VII.) with the King Catholic about the marriage of Henry with Katharine, are two or three passages declaring that the marriage with Arthur was consummated, although this is not affirmed in the dispensation. Sends by the first courier a copy of the brief of pope Julius to the king of England upon the dispensation for the second marriage.

The documents which it is now important to produce in the Queen's behalf, and send to Rome, are as follows: 1. The agreement for the second marriage, confirmed by the Kings Catholic, 24 Sept. 1503, ("paso ante Almazan,") at Saragossa. 2. A treaty of the Kings Catholic for peace, and the first marriage, anno '99, with an instruction apart (secretaries Hernan d'Alvarez and Colonna)—at Valencia.

The documents to be presented by virtue of the compulsoriales are the following: 1. The second capitulation between the Kings Catholic and Henry VII. upon the marriage of Henry. 2. The power given by the Kings Catholic to Hernan Duque to demand the 100,000 cr. from the king of England, and to let him (her ?) come to Spain to the Queen con su familia. To search for letters of the ambassador in which he wrote that [the King] does not wish to let her [return], nor to restore her property; and letters of the King himself upon the same subject.

A letter signed by Henry VIII. acknowledging the receipt of 500,000 cr. for the dower of the second marriage, sealed. A bond given by certain Genoese to pay Henry VIII. 45,000 cr. of the same dower. A copy of another letter, signed by a notary, of the payment of 100,000 cr. of the first marriage. An account of the expenditure of 200,000 cr. of the first marriage. This Doctor Beltran took to get authenticated by the notaries. A letter of the King Catholic to the said Doctor ought to be presented, because he says in it that he will have a greater war than against the Turk. The letter of Henry VIII. after his marriage, stating that he was well satisfied, and of his coronation anno 1509. Two letters from Henry VII. respiting payment of the dowry, in which he says that he has forborne to accept some other proposal of marriage, with more money. Also the letter written by the king of England to pope Alexander upon the dispensation for the second marriage, dated 28 Nov. 1504.

There ought also to be presented the letter which Dr. Beltran has, signed by the King Catholic, which he delivered to the archbishop of Toledo.

1 Oct. 6656. CROKE to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Records of the Reformation, I. 443.

After his last letters from Ferrara, Augustin de Philibertis came to Ferrara, sent by the Prothonotary to friar Francis de Cremona, with letters of credence, but containing nothing else, which Croke saw. He lodged with Vincentius, his cousin, who came to Croke, and told him that Augustine had books and letters for him from the Prothonotary. Sent his servant for them, but Augustine said he had none for Croke, but only for Francis de Cremona, to whom he had delivered them. Asked Francis to be allowed to see them; but he also replied that he had none, and added that he did not wish to cause hatred between Croke and others; that he thought he had heard from Augustine that this hindrance came from the Imperial ambassador at Venice, who, perhaps, wrote to the Duke's factor to tell him what had been done at Venice, and bid him beware that the like was not done at Ferrara. Augustine afterwards came to Croke's inn to see him. Hopes he does not wish to hinder the cause at Cremona, Mantua, Milan, and Pavia; which places, he says, the Prothonotary has committed to him. He advised Croke, and said he had also advised the Prothonotary, "that for making of bruit by the let of his person, that neither of us should come into any of the said places." He said that he already had made a consultation in favor of the King's cause; that he had no books from the Prothonotary, but the bare case; and he complained he had had no money from him. Bade him not doubt that the Prothonotary would reward him well. He said also that Curta, of Padua, would not now counsel in the King's cause without 100 angelots. "The said Curtius" first promised to counsel for 50 cr., and afterwards not for less than 100; now he will not for less than 150.

This is the diligence of Cassalis, who, Croke hears, has entreated friar Thomas Omnibonus and Doctor Hannibal to say that they were retained by him. Sends a copy of a letter of Parisius, given him by Dr. Hannibal, who is to be one of the Rota at Rome. He is retained by the Prothonotary; and the "let" at the college of Padua, of which he is one of the chief, comes through him. The Prothonotary today denied that Philibertis had advised him not to go to Mantua, &c. Fears the matter will be spoiled there before he goes. Could not get the Prothonotary to give him a letter of credence to any one in any of these places. Will go thither, and also to Padua, to see what he can do. Venice, 1 Oct.

As the beast, whom his correspondent knows, takes no account of his duty, nor of his own nor the King's honor, having no fear of deceiving or imposing on any one, I suggest that, for revenge, you should write to me, begging for the remainder of the money, mentioning my promises and your deserts, which were the chief cause of gaining friends for the King at Padua, and of the Paduan instrument, which the King highly values. You must also praise Simonetus, saying that Ambrose would have done nothing without him; and, without abuse of the Bishop, bewail his shabbiness. I will attest everything to the King from the relations of others. You must write to me two letters; one copy I will show to the man himself, and thus compel him to perform his promises, not without interest. If he does not do so soon, will take care that the King reads the other letter. The consequences will be more than perhaps you hoped. You may be sure that I will do what I can, either by myself or through friends. Venice, 2 Oct.

2 Oct. 6661. MAI to CHARLES V.

Add. MS. 28,581, f. 204. B. M.

Wrote on the 15th Sept., and sent a copy of the memorial which he gave, on the part of Messer Andrea and himself, to the Pope, as proctors for the queen of England. Noted in the margin the answer which was given to the three articles, for execution of which two letters are despatched from hence, one to the nuncio in France, to obtain possession of the book, and the other to the nuncio in England, to inform himself on two points, viz., touching the subornation and threats used for obtaining the seals in England, and whether the Queen had been known by her first husband. Advises the Emperor to write him a letter commending his devotion to himself, and recommending to him the Queen's interests. As to the other four articles, for which, as he wrote, he and Ancona and St. Quatuor waited in the Pope's presence, has written in the margin of the copy now sent, that which has been agreed about each, viz., that the universities which pronounced against the Queen should be written to to give a reason for what they have done,—that they should be lawfully convoked, and every one called upon to justify his vote, on whichever side it was given, and that no university should give an opinion in this matter without being informed from here. Has been promised a brief that the King and the lady he loves should separate, but they wish it to be notified to the King's ambassadors. The English ambassadors have presented to the Pope a very disgraceful letter from the kingdom, of which I have obtained a copy very secretly. An answer, they say, will be made from here, such as it merits. More than a month ago, the English ambassadors pressed the Pope to tell them that which he is to declare (lo que ha de declarar), which I believe he has hitherto refused, as the English complain of him. They have since asked for a delay of 15 days after entering the holidays, which the Pope has refused to grant without my consent; and although I have often refused, they have called me, with Ancona, to try and persuade me to it. Gives an account of the conference. The English insist on two reasons why the Pope should dissolve this marriage without legal process;—first, in order, as set forth in the letter, that the kingdom may not be without an heir male; and, secondly, on account of the protest which they say the King made, by virtue of which he considers himself not bound before God, and that he is in mortal sin, from which the Pope ought to release him. This course has been advised by Decio. Arguments against it.

Mentions that this year one of the Jews at Rome has been obliged to take the widow of his brother, who had died without children,—a thing which is not only not prohibited, but actually enjoined by their law. Complains of not having sufficient instructions either from Castile or England.

The English press for the cardinal's hat for the auditor of the Chamber. The Pope complicates the matter, saying that he has commissioned his nuncio, the baron Del Burgo, to write if the king of England require it of him; which he will not only do, but send another ambassador for the very purpose. Fears the Pope will comply in this case as in that of Tarbes. The English and French both complain that Scalenga took from them all their letters at Aste. Believes it is not true. The king of England has written to Gregory Casal that it has been said he has not used due diligence,—which the King does not believe,—and he commits the matter to his care, with great thanks.

6663. W. CAPON to WOLSEY.

Since my last we have had commandment from the King, by my lord of Norfolk, to dissolve the college. On the Feast of the Nativity of Our Lady, I paid the singing men and the choristers, with all their necessary apparel, as I trust shall stand with your honor. The subdean then repaired to court, to learn the King's pleasure what order should be taken for the college, and who should remain. He was told by my lord of Norfolk that the King's pleasure was that I, the subdean, schoolmaster, usher, and six grammar children should remain until we had further knowledge of the King's pleasure, and give an account of such receipts of the revenues of the college as were due at the Annunciation of Our Lady last past. On 19 Sept. the commission sat at Woodbridge, in Suffolk, to find offices on all our lands, &c., Sir Philip Tylney, Humphrey Wingfyld, Thomas Rushe, and Thomas Jermyn, and gave verdict that by reason of the præmunire committed by your Grace, as they allege, all our lands were forfeited to the King. My payments for the college exceed the receipts by 100*l.*, by which I was compelled to pawn my plate. After this, I left Ipswich two days before Michaelmas, and so came to Jesus College. I intend to be at London at the beginning of term, and to learn the King's pleasure as to the College. Cambridge, 4 Oct. Signed.

7 Oct. 6666. WILLIAM TRESHAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

On the 4th I wrote to you of all the news I had respecting your colleges. On the 6th Mr. Beatts and I were with the Chancellor (More) at Chelsea, and delivered him your letters. "He entertained us very gentilly, but supersedeas we could not obtain, for he said the King's council had sent him word to the contrary." He advised us to make labor with the King. Accordingly we returned to Hampton Court, where I delivered your letters to Mr. Norris and Dr. Butts. I learned that the Council have determined that the site of your college shall be found by office. On the 7th I delivered your letters to the King, which he kept. Those of the college he delivered to Mr. Fitzwilliam. As it was very late and dark, I did not think fit to break the matter till next day. I sent Mr. Dean to come up with all speed to bring up the letters of the university, urging the King to mercy, and also to bring the patent for Mr. Norris. I trust he will help in this great need. If not, he only slenderly does his duty. I fear no supersedeas will be granted, and the college will be taken from your Grace, to its no little hindrance. As touching the land and impropriations, they will escheat to the King. I exhort your Grace to patience.

7 Oct. 6667. HENRY VIII. to GHINUCCI, BENET, and CASALE.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 261.

Received, 30 Sept., their joint and several letters, dated Rome, the 17th, showing that their efforts with the Pope in the King's behalf had been fruitless. Wishes they had not refrained from alleging the custom of England that no one should be compelled to go to law out of the kingdom. This is a privilege, grounded on solid reasons, which their hired advocates at Rome will not admit; but the Pope cannot well call it in question, else it may be inquired in turn why the bishop of the Roman Church should have supremacy over all other churches, or why he should thus treat a King who acknowledges no superior on earth. Why should Henry be compelled to try a cause at Rome, which concerns not only his own conscience but the succession to his kingdom? The only answer that can be returned is, that princes have sometimes allowed it in the past, but Henry believes very few have done so; and that is no argument for the future. At Rome the case may be viewed differently; but the King, who is supreme in his own kingdom, can interdict to all inferiors the power of appeal. They must, therefore, put these considerations strongly before the Pope, and continue to press him for an answer to the King's demands; for he and Francis act together, and ask only what is just. As the Pope has acknowledged our marriage to be prohibited by Divine law, his first care, as God's vicar, ought to be to vindicate that law.

The university of Padua has come to a determination that the things of God are not committed to the Pope, but only matters of human jurisdiction; and it is most extraordinary that when the Pope acknowledges that Divine law warrants the King in departing from his marriage, he should still delay the remedy. It is not possible that the Queen could obtain as many opinions in her favor as the King has, without appealing to the Lutherans; nor can the Emperor's influence or the Pope's favor counterpoise the opinions given.

If none of these arguments have any effect, you shall request the Pope not to proceed in the matter at Rome before the end of January; but this you must do in your own name, not in ours, suggesting what he himself proposed, and what you also think expedient, viz., that both sides should abstain meanwhile from proceeding either at Rome or in England, so that in the interval the privileges both of the King and of the Pope may be examined. If the Pope, however, make a difficulty about granting this without a similar assurance on Henry's part, they may give it in Henry's name.

After you have obtained the prorogation of our cause, you shall present our letters and those of the French king, not failing to inculcate on the Pope that our marriage is prohibited both by Divine and by natural law; which two laws, in our case, you must by no means allow to be disjoined. We wonder, though you have been so diligent in other things, you have not taken counsel hitherto with learned men what we should do in the last resort, in declining the Pope's judgment, or what we should allege or propose to stave it off. See what you can do now to this effect. We wonder also that you accepted so short a time, viz., to the middle of this month, to have an answer from us whether we wished the cause further prorogued, with a promise on the King's part not to proceed in England; but what is done cannot be corrected.

You are to thank Decius Senensis for his opinion, which, so far as it concerns our cause, is very satisfactory; but what he adds as to the interpretation of Divine right by the canonists was foreign to his undertaking (res a professione aliena); for Divine law does not receive its interpretation from the canons, but gives it to them. You must mention this to Decius, and get him to give you his opinion without the latter part. You must keep the French cardinals friendly. We send letters for cardinal Trani, which you shall deliver. Hampton Court, 7 Oct. 1530. Signed at the head.

8 Oct. 6669. [CROKE] to CRANMER.

Vit. B. XIII. 121. B. M.

Duprat and Guillaume des Barres, but to the present hour nothing has been done, as the ambassador wrote to me." The passage is exceedingly obscure, especially from the want of punctuation in the original.

declaration to that effect, and appoint a proxy to receive the money. Hears that the books are worth much money. But for Cassalis and the friar whom he sent, would have had a determination from the lawyers at Ferrara for money, "the which also . . . . . thank be to my lord of London, to the loss of 72 seals of [doctors of] the law unto the King."

The Bishop commanded friar Ambrose, to whom Croke had committed the correction of the instrument, to return it to Cassalis, and he made Cassalis privy to what Croke had compassed at Ferrara, caused a friar to be sent thither to pick away Croke's thanks, or else to enlessen . . . . . and injure the King's cause. Besides he would not give a halfpenny to [doctors] and friars gained by Croke, whose subscriptions Cranmer copied when he went to Rome; nor would he leave money with Croke for them. He told [the] Cassalis that Croke had complained of them, and exhorted them they should [set forth the King's cause all] they could, saying, ne hic nebulo ansam habeat c[onquerendi] adversum vos.

Begs him to procure some promotion or some . . . . . for . . . . . Thomas and good friar Francis, who is sore sick at Rome, and also for Simonetus. These three are daily assailed with foul means by the Emperor's ambassador, who tells them they shall have other reward than a few crowns, and layeth for ex[ample] . . . . . and Berges, to whom the Emperor has given a promotion of more than 600 cr. Can do no more, if men see no fruit of their labors. Asks him to inform my lord . . . . . or the King, else all will be lost. "Leonicus got us Simonetus a . . . . . Ambrosius, and hath promised so highly that ye would wonder . . . . . ye see nothing at all performed his promise; that men g . . . . . of us all in a manner for his sake. The halting horse . . . . . ever since stand at * * * letters unto the King, I bought and caused certain books of Greek to be [writ]ten out for him." Paid for a chariot to carry his gear, for his men's meat and drink from Ferrara to Bologna, and many times for his boat, and this is the thanks he gives. Asks Cranmer what he says of him to the King. The last time he wrote to Cranmer, sent a letter to the King, with a copy of the instrument of Ferrara, and of other letters to the King and Cranmer. Desires him to ask my lord of Wiltshire and lady Boleyn to move the King to send him money and the authority of an ambassador; which, if he had, he could have recovered the instrument. Offers to be hanged, drawn and quartered, if, with this power, he does not quickly bring the King's purpose to pass in Italy. Does not ask for it from ambition, but to avoid the hindrance which Cassalis causes by lessening his credence. If he has not this power, wishes that Cassalis was ordered to meddle with no man without his consent.

Raphael, not friar Francis' man, but the canon of Padua, has written against the King. Had his counsel, and returned it by Stokesley's order, though he had said that if he had it again, he would write against the King. Stokesley has conspired with Cassalis that he may live with him for nothing. He has ordered the friars whom Croke retained to deal with Cassalis and not with him. There was offered to him today, 8 Oct., Raphael's counsel for the King and for the Emperor, in which he says that he composed the counsel for the King merely as an exercise of ingenuity.

Stokesley keeps a letter which Croke wrote to Raphael, and sent for him to see, doubtless to prove that he wrote against the King, because Croke kept his counsel, but the comparison of the dates of the letter and of the book sent to the King will destroy that argument, the book being printed before the letter was written. No doubt this was Cassalis' reason for wanting to get the book.

6670. [CROKE] to STOKESLEY.

Vit. B. XIII. 122 b. B. M.

Two curtains were missing when Stokesley's pack and bedstaves were brought to Harwell's.

Is surprised, for neither Croke nor any of his people had opened them. Wonders that he told Ambrose not to give the confirmation of the instrument to Croke but to Cassalis. He reports how Stokesley dealt with friar Francis, that he owes money to the cobbler for cobbling his shoes, that he has caused friar Bartholomew to ascribe all the pains he has taken for the King to Cassalis' solicitation only, and not Stokesley's, without whose reasoning and authorities given in writing his work would have been very slender. Has been in hand with the friar to amend that by writing a letter to the King. Save Pagninus, the King has had hitherto no friar who has written like him. Friar Thomas's other work is almost finished. Hears that Stokesley has informed Sir Andrew de Cassalis and Previdellus of what Croke showed him secretly at Rhegio, and exhorted them to play the men, and set forth the King's cause all that they could, saying ne hic nebulo habeat ansam conquerendi de nobis apud regem. Has not deserved such words, "yet tu indignus es qui hæc dicas." Trusts that he will at last see cause for loving him, and hating those for whose cause he has thus treated him. Leonicus will not have the horse, and complains both of Croke and Stokesley. He intends to utter his displeasure in a work, which he will "eder" in the name either of Mr. Pol or my lord of Durham. Will try to pacify him. The Imperial ambassador daily tries to win Simonetus [and] Thomazo from the King, sparing neither threats nor promises. Father Francis is sick at Rome, and has no comfort. The Emperor has promoted Felix Berges and another to benefices of above 600 cr., and told divers of the King's friends that if they would take the Queen's part their reward would be more than a few crowns. Men are weary of our promises, and look fast upon the Emperor's deeds. Unless the King rewards these three and Leonicus, all will swerve. Has no money for them, and dares not promise any. Is ashamed of not having performed his promises. Friar Bartholomew had only three crowns for his work and journey to Padua. Begs him to move the King to do somewhat. The Prothonotary says that Raphael has written sore against the King. Received a letter today, which he would have sent if Simon had been with him, saying that Ambrose has procured . . . . . and will procure as much for the Queen as for us. But Simon, hearing of . . . . . of the said money, retained that letter and the money, and w . . . . . another, in the which I made him promise if he dy . . . . . largely." The horse is utterly marred, and is at Padua, and . . . . . to Leonicus, the sight of which made him much more ang[ry] . . . and he thought himself mocked by us. Hopes Stokesley will see that Croke suffers no loss. There is [none will give a] ducat for the horse, which goes only on three legs. [Sends] a letter from Ambrose, who told Croke's servant that he would complain of Stokesley to the King, "and writeth . . . . . episcopus imposuit illi ut tantum solum ageret in causa regis quantum illi comm . . . . . cum quo in camera fuerat secreto collocutus." Complains of Stokesley's dealing thus with him. Has never hindered him in word or deed. Knows now, though too late, of all his sayings and doings. Stokesley has put him out of credence, so that he can do no good. Knows now why Stokesley kept his letters. Sent Pallavicinus to Ferrara, and [made] Cassalis privy to what Croke has long before obtained. He has done the King more harm than he thinks. "My letters sent to Mr. Benet, ye neither did well nor justly fo[r] . . . the only occasion, why I wrote the letter and ye were the man that . . . . ye had written nothing of Dionysius to Doctor Benet and the n . . . . . the letter was your only device in likewise as ye made me to . . . . things to the King of the Senate and Cassalis, which I would . . . upon your cre-

Vit. B. XIII. 124 b. B. M.

Sends subscriptions received today from friar Thomas. Save two there is none worth a button, but they be omnigatherum. The hand is the friar's own. Wishes him to find out whether the King has any more subscriptions in the same hand, given him by Stokesley or Cassalis; for then he may be sure that Stokesley has ordered the friars whom Croke has engaged to work for him and Cassalis, and not for Croke. If Stokesley offers any counsel of Marquardus with subscriptions to the King, it is plain that he has done the same with friar Francis' cousin, Dominicus. Asks him, if this is so, to exhibit to the King the copy of Leonicus' letter. Will send all his successes to the King through him. By Stokesley's practising with Cassalis, they have lost the determination of Ferrara, and are likely to lose all the doctors in Milan, Cremona, Pavia, Mantua and Thaurino. Have lost almost all the friars. Raphael's book is printed in derision of the King; and what has happened at Bologna, Cranmer knows. Sends Stokesley's letter sealed. He must keep it four days and more after the King has his letters.

The Pope told him that Tarbes was leaving him, that the duke of Albany was coming, and that Tarbes had told him he believed Albany would treat for a marriage of his Holiness's niece with the son of the king of Scotland (sic), and that he would leave that of France, but the Pope should not conclude anything without having his letters, since he was ambassador for the king of France.

* * * The English have got a prorogation of the cause on the ground that the Dean is ill; which is quite true. Has complained to the Pope, however. Is told the Pope has occupied the Rota with a question about the affair of Luther.

Hears that the bishop of Bayonne has returned from England to France. Understands that the king of England requires the Pope once more to commit the cause to the archbishop of Canterbury or the English clergy; and in this he is supported by the French king. De Tarbes, however, has explained to the Pope, after much prevarication (en fin de muchos rodeos), that the letter written by the French king was only granted in consequence of great importunity. * * *

The Pope has informed me that when his nuncio, the baron Del Burgo, arrived at Dover (Dobla), he found it had been ordered that no one should enter or leave the kingdom without a licence, and accordingly returned. The duke of Albany, it is said, will embark at Turin, and come by the river to Ravenna. Regrets this, as he will pass through the heart of Italy. * * * Had some conversation with Tarbes before he left, on the king of England's cause, in which Tarbes recommended a delay of half or a whole year, as the matter was owing to an amour of the King, which would pass away, while the Queen's case was one of justice, which would always continue. Delay is quite the French policy, as they expect thereby to become judges of the English, as the English have formerly been of them. * * * Rome, 10 Oct. 1530.

ii. Enclosure in the preceding.

* * * Mentioned in writing to the Emperor that the English were endeavoring to get the cause committed to the archbishop of Canterbury. Has learnt, however, that what they seek is, that in case the King marry, the Pope will not proceed against him. In reason the Pope ought not to listen to them; but since he has done so, I have urged him as strongly as possible to answer them rightly. This he has promised to do today. The cause increases every day. Nevertheless I have insisted on the new inhibition, and they have promised to give it me.

My lord of Wiltshire, who at first affirmed that the King had granted a supersedeas, denied it in the presence of my lord of Norfolk. However, on the 11th I got a supersedeas sealed in the Chancery, and allowed by the King's council. I sent it to the commissioners at Oxford. The Chancellor is very good in this matter, entertained me very lovingly, and showed me that Master Stephens is specially good to the college. I beg you will thank them both. I hope to obtain Mr. Baynton by promise of a fee, and so consequently my lord of Norfolk; "for that is the chief way, after the counsel of Mr. Butts, the which, with Mr. Chambre, most humbly recommend them to your Grace, and say that they will do what they may." I look for Mr. Dean and Mr. Carter continually. My Lord Chancellor fears that the King will in conclusion have your Grace's college, for all the supersedeas; but he added, that Mr. Secretary (Gardiner) was active for its continuance, and thought the King could not make it less than you intended. I trust it shall continue, as we shall now be impartially heard by the Chief Justice, Mr. Norwyge, and Mr. Attorney. Tarbes is going every day, but is not gone yet. Believes it is owing to the affair of England. Before yesterday the Pope undeceived him in the three points they had proposed; viz., 1, that the cause should be committed to the archbishop of Canterbury; 2, or to him and his clergy; 3, or that, if the King should do anything of fact, the Pope should not fulminate censures against him. The same night the cardinal of Ravenna came to me to inform me of it. He is in truth a good servant of your Majesty. Tarbes made a long reply in the matter. He has since taken another article, that the cause be deferred, and that the king of France be referred to in it. Mai replied by a demand of justice from the Pope, saying that the French king might interpose in due time. Had a conversation today with De Tarbes, while he was waiting to enter the Pope's chamber, when he warned Mai of the danger of the course he was pursuing, and the desirability of delay, with precautions that the king of England do not act for himself. Made answer that it was not owing to the Emperor or the Queen that there had not been six or seven delays, and that he could not consent to it without express orders. Will press for the new inhibition, but fears that it will not be granted.

Harl. MS. 36. f. 43. B. M.

Grant of Don Alonso Perez de Guzman, duke of Medina Sidonia, to the English merchants trading at his town of San Lucar de Barrameda, in accordance with their petition. 1. He grants them a piece of ground near the river, and his storehouse, to build a church of St. George. 2. They complain that the customers of Seville, Cadiz, and Gerez (Xerez ?) misuse them for landing goods at San Lucar, demand customs from them, and arrest them; the Duke promises to bear the cost of any suits instituted for this cause, and to procure the restitution of sequestered goods. 3. Will command the customers to take only the duties specified in the previous privileges of English merchants; will have all doubts cleared up, and give a table and ordinances in writing. 4. Will command the judges to proceed instantly to execution in cases of debts by obligations or contracts with Spaniards; the Englishmen complaining that they lose many debts by the long delays in justice. 5. Promises that no wines or other merchandize with which the English ships are laden shall be "embargued" by the Duke's rent gatherers for the debts of the Spanish owners, if the English merchants will demand from the persons from whom they receive the wine, bills from the rent gatherers, stating that they owe the Duke nothing. 6. Permits them to lade their merchandize in any barks of the town they please, without being bound to tarry for the first bark of the row. 7. Permits the hosts of the English merchants, during their absence, to buy and sell for them, without being taxed as brokers, unless they charge brokerage. 8. Takes the English under his protection, so that they shall not be killed nor molested, nor their goods taken nor sequestered "by markes nor countermarkes, nor for imbargementes," nor for any debts. This protection is to be proclaimed. 9. Englishmen may carry weapons by day or night. Any excess shall be tried by the justices of the town and the governor and council. 10. The house of the governor and eight others appointed by him shall not be compelled to take any guests but Englishmen. 11. Civil causes touching Englishmen shall be tried by their governor and council. In criminal cases the justices may not imprison without informing the governor and council. 12. They may lade and unlade their merchandize from before the Friary of St. Dominic to the Alacaseria. 13. They may store in cellars any wines left over after lading their ships.

This order is to be kept, under penalty of depriving of offices, and payment of 10,000 maravedis, and is to be proclaimed. Seville, 14 March 1517.

16 Oct. R. O. 6687. CUTHBERT TUNSTALL, BISHOP OF DURHAM, to WOLSEY.

I have warned my clergy, according to your commandment, to appear at your convocation at York on 7 Nov. next; but as Parliament has been prorogued till 22nd of Oct., and men doubt "whether that day do hold or not," and as the old custom has been to see what the province of Canterbury first assented to, and then for the province of York to consent or dissent, as the case may be, I thought best to send to your Grace to know whether you will prorogue the day or not. If you determine on the 7th, I beg you to license me to be absent till St. Andrew's Day, after which I must repair to York for the King's commission. 17 Oct. R. O. 6688. THOS. ARUNDELL to WOLSEY.

Delivered, as instructed, Wolsey's letters to my lord of Norfolk, with as lowly recommendations as he could devise. After reading them the Duke walked in the park of Hamtuncorte, and asked for his credence. Declared all Wolsey's "good fashions and manner of living," and tried to persuade him how little you aspired to any authority; but the Duke could refrain no longer, and said no man should make him believe that, "and the more that I spake to the contrary, the more out of frame I found him. For, after many contradictions on both sides, he showed me, though I list to be blinded, I should blind no man here; for he said, he had both your Grace's hand to the contrary, and knew three messages sent by three divers persons of your Grace to the King, whereby it might well appear that ye desired as much authority as ever ye did." The messengers were Brertun, Laytun, and a third unknown to Arundell, whose name he has forgotten. Wolsey had reminded each of them of the benefits he had conferred on them and their families. All these messages are taken in the worst sense, and it is almost impossible to remove their mistrust. "I beseech your Grace on my knees that ye will not be known that I have sent you word of these persons' names, nor of the matter, which might do me great hurt, and your Grace no good." By making long suit has got Norfolk to promise "that in all your reasonable causes he will be as good friend to your Grace as I can desire; and as for Strangwyche's matter, look what reason, conscience or law may do for your Grace, and ye shall be sure thereof, as he sayeth." Has moved my lords Chancellor and Chief Justice in that matter, who are to determine the cause along with Norfolk. In four or five days they will hear what Strangwyche has to say about "this new matter that maketh for your Grace," and make an end thereof. Is sure master Secretary is willing to do Wolsey pleasure, "always regarding that by means of setting forth your Grace's suits he be not perferid to mosche one youre parte." He favors Wolsey's college more than any other. Knows he has lately spoken with the King, and got him to instruct the judges and counsel to devise for the surety of the college. The King will, however, take some of the lands of the college. Wolsey's restitution is considered "not available by the law," but he need not fear the King or any other. "As concerning the estate that ye be now in, and again, if all men would persuade the King to the contrary hereof, I think assuredly they could not prevail; wherefore, your Grace need not doubt but that that is now done shall shortly be done to your Grace's comfort." 17 Oct. 6689. [CROKE] to CRANMER.

Vit. B. XIII. 124. B. M.

This book, printed before my lord (Stokesley) left Venice, the last day of August, would not have been printed if Stokesley had not forced him to deliver it, and a copy he had made, to Cassalis. Told him that Raphael said he had no more copies, and on the receipt of this, he would begin his work in the Queen's favor; but, nevertheless, Stokesley said that unless Croke delivered it, he would [complain of him] to the King. Has informed the King of the result. On the 24th or 25th of August, Stokesley s[howed] Croke a letter from Raphael; to which Croke wrote an answer, and sent it to Stokesley, to be forwarded or not, as he thought best.

Stokesley retains it, for two reasons :—to p[rove that] Raphael wrote his work against the King because Croke would not return his copy;—but the [date] of the book, compared with the date of Croke's letter, it being St. B[artholomew's] Even when Stokesley first spoke of it, will show that this is untrue; and, secondly, to prove that Croke had divers things procured by him a[nd others] out of their hands, and ascribed them to his own labor. They thus try to prevent him [furthering] the King's cause. For this reason he left all the money with . . . . and none with Croke, and commanded the friars whom he had got, [to deal] no more with him, but with Cassalis, as appears by the letters of Leonicus, of whose gravity Pole can tell him. Friar Ambrose writes that Stokesley has made so many promises, and [not] performed them, that he has done much hurt to the King's cause. He ha[s caused] the King and the realm such shame, that the King had be[tter have] spent 10,000*l.* than have sent him hither. "[And as for] what I had done for the King, or ye went to Rome, ye[a, and what] I have done since, it were pity that I should lose my t[hanks, and others] have them that utterly have let the matter and shamed . . . [I pray] you therefore to be suitor for me. Sir, I sent unto yo[u] . . . . . courier, dwelling without Temple B[ar] . . . . . a letter certifying . . . . . and a copy of the instrument and determination of Ferrara," a letter to the King, and copies of others. On the 1 Oct., as your Majesty knows, began the council of England. Reports some rumors about it, which he cannot well believe. Makes some comments of his own on the case. Remembered that twenty days ago, talking with the English ambassador, he asked him, "What will the king of England do with his daughter if you go on with this wicked intention?" He replied that the King wished her to marry. I said that whoever married her would expect the succession. He said, for this there would be good means. These things make me suspect that there is to be some talk about it. Should not be surprised if Henry were to give his daughter to him, although he has neither feet nor hands (aunque le faltan pies y manos). Vit. B. XIII. 127. B. M.

The 19th [Oct.] gave to Edmond Herwell, to be sent to the King, excerpts in corroboration of his cause, from a Greek book, and from the Epistles, and Panorm[ia Ivonis] episcopi, and certain subscriptions from friar Thomas, but not of much authority or learning. Delivered also the same day unto the [courier] letters of Dr. Brianus, vicar to the chancellor of the university of [Padua], the King's case printed by Casale, a copy of his own letters from Ferrara and Venice, stating that for lack of money, and by means of a friar [sent about] Italy by Sir Gregory with the King's own book and other writings in his favor, the [determi]nation of the divines of Ferrara was got from him; and the college of lawyers, who had promised, by Cœlius' procurement, to determine for the King, were forbidden to do so.

For 150 cr. in deposito the determination would have been given immediately under their common seal, and afterwards a counsel signed and sealed by them all, being 72 in number. Asks for a letter of credence for the duke of Ferrara, and a letter of thanks to Cœlius. Does not understand why the King's cause should have been printed, and copies sent to Augustin de

Philibertis, cousin to friar Vincentius, our enemy, and to Padua, Bonony, and Ferrara, except to noise it abroad at Pavia, Milan, Mantua, and Turin, and make men more dangerous and costly. Intended to practise secretly in these places with the bishop of London.

Brianus' letter will show the King that his cause has not nor shall be proposed in the college of lawyers at Padua; for their chief, Parisius, not only refuses to write for the King, but goes about, by the procurement of the ambassador, to hinder those who would write. Sends a copy of a letter from him, dated Padua, 3 Sept. 1530, dissuading Hannibal from writing, for fear of offending Casale, and of a letter from Hannibal, showing that the ambassador is concerned in it. Campeggio's secretary, Florianus, and his fellows, have gone from town to town reporting that their master has the King's own handwriting affirming that the Queen was a maid when he married her; and he therefore will not accept an oath to the contrary,—on which oath the Queen has often offered to be content that her matter should be settled. The worst mischief is what has arisen from this book of Rhaphael Comensis, which Croke again sends to the King. He is the greatest solicitor that the Emperor has for the Queen in Italy. He caused his works for the King and the Queen to be printed and set forth together, that he might declare his affection for the Emperor, to the greater detriment and derision of the King. In the Queen's part, he plainly declares that the other was written as an exercise, but that this is his true opinion;—which words the Imperialists brag abroad to the King's great detriment. From the example of this book, by the labor of the Imperial ambassador, and by persuasion of the King's "most regal facility ad ignoscendum," all the friars and others whom he had attained now swerve and practise collusion with the Emperor's ambassador. Some have promised him to procure as much for the Queen as for the King. Friar Thomas says the ambassador "had sore labored him in this behalf," and he and others are much fainter than they were. Both he and Dionysius, who practises for friar Francis, daily resort to the Imperial ambassador, and the ambassador to friar Thomas. Hopes by his next letters to tell the King who is faithful, and who not. To excuse Raphael's wilful error, the King's ambassador has procured a letter from Rhaphael "unto [your Highness] . . . . . set forth a book the 19 day of this present month, printed in the . . . . . cause. Howbeit the titles and ends of both books compared togy[der in my] judgment compared together, will prove that this latter nothing an[swers] . . . . . made unto your Highness in the other, but manifestly declareth . . . . . hath written for your Highness he will nothing sustain and . . . . . somever he writeth against your Highness that to be his opinion and my[nd] . . . . . truth by him to be sustained." Thought himself bound to write concerning this, lest the King might be deceived by the letters of others.

The bishop of London writes to him [from Lyons] on 23 Sept. that the King desires him to send copies of the counsels to the ambassador in Rome. Has reserved no copies, which he would have done if the Bishop had advertised him in time. Gave the Bishop [copies] of the instrument of Padua, and all other counsels and subscriptions. Sent an index of them by Cranmer, and subscribed all the counsels with the words tradidit Londoniensi, but he was in too great haste to give Croke a bill. Some of the friars say that they have orders from my lord of London to meddle only with him and Cassalis, not with Croke. Does not know how he could do so, for he knows that he was deceived by Cyprian Berges, the dean of the lawyers of Padua, and others. He must have known also that this would not amend the negligence and infidelity of Cassalis, but put all the King's secrets in a hazard of being better [known] to the Emperor and the Pope than would be good.

Sundry great impediments and slanders cause him to wish the King to hear his other long and tedious letter read, or to take the report thereof from Cranmer only. As I hoped, card. de Grammont has had another word with the Pope about England. The English ambassadors, on receipt of letters from England of the 8th, "eurent refery du contenu en leursdites responses assez froidement;" but Grammont got his Holiness to consent finally to grant the delay, according to such form and conditions as I believe he will write, when he is with the King, to Madame and you. The Pope acted as well as could be, and told the ambassadors he granted the delay for the sake of Francis, against the wish of the Imperial ambassador. He twice answered them that he would do the utmost in his power, and even more, in consideration of the close alliance between England and France. He told me yesterday evening that he would despatch an express today, and write with his own hand to the Emperor, to get his approval of what had been done, as done for the best; which, he said, he had some hope of obtaining, as the Emperor had taken very well what the bishop of Vaison had written to him, and had asked time to consider it. 6700. MAI to CHARLES V.

Wrote on the 15th about the card. of Agramonte, and the delay he asked for in the matter of the Kings (de los ser. Reyes) of England. The Pope endeavored to get me to agree to a suspension of twenty days, but I opposed it. The card. of Osma then made a similar request to me by the Pope's desire, suggesting that in the interval the king of France, who had written in favor of England, might be brought to reason, or at least his mouth would be shut. Replied by showing the delays that had already occurred, and the unreasonableness of continually putting the Emperor off; to which both the Cardinal and Muscettola, who was present, agreed, so that the Pope had nothing to say in answer. Letters have since come from the king of England. Has not yet been able to discover their effect, but thinks from some information sent him from Bologna, whither Gregory Casal had gone to fetch his wife, that the King wishes them to give a promise not to take any new step during January. The enclosed from the baron Del Burjo, who is nuncio in England, will show the good results that have been obtained there.

I think I told you the English ambassadors would not give up to the Pope the letters they had from their King, when they demanded the three points of which I wrote. Tarbes† gave that of the French king, but afterwards got it back, saying that although Francis had full confidence in his Holiness, we were all mortals, and it might come into hands he would not like. I forbore to tell the Pope this was not an honorable way for kings to negotiate. I have every day solicited the two points that remain of the memorial that I sent you, and yesterday they promised that card. Ancona, to whom it is committed, would give his vote in presence of the English ambassadors; and the Pope has promised to call them for that purpose today. Rodrigo Ninyo says that he will not write in this matter without the Pope's consent. It is not true, as the English pretend, that they have got a strong brief (un breve rezio), except that of which I wrote to you.

At Ferrara they have made the same diligence as at Bologna and Padua. The Duke's officers have promised to get the doctors to give a candid opinion, and not consult simply in the King's interest (y no quisieron sino que aconseiassen en fabor del Rey). These are vain diligences, for they themselves know quite well the cause is to be determined according to justice and canon law; and yet these men go troubling the world with theologians. The King's matters, by the bishop of London's handling, cannot prosper as much in Croke's hands as they ought to do. The friars whom Croke only attained, he has ordered to resort to Cassalis; whereof he hopes no harm will come, for good cannot. Knowing Cranmer's perfect zeal to the King's most rightful cause, encloses to him his letters to the King open, which he desires him to read and ponder whether it is better to deliver them or not. Thinks that, if my Lord has lessened Croke's credence by misreport, there is no way to put him to the rebuke for his untruth and covetousness in saving the money he would have paid to the Prothonotary for his meat and drink, but to show the King this letter, with Leonicus' enclosed; "in likewise if ye see the friar Thomas to send any work to the King." Harl. MS. 416. f. 21. B. M. Records of the Reformation, II. 35. Ellis, 3 Ser. II. 167.

Since the 28th Aug. has given friar Thomas 23 cr., since which time he hath got the King but seven subscriptions, which Croke sent by Harwell, 19 Oct. Only two of them are worthy thanks. Calls upon him often, but he answers that there are no more doctors to be got, which Croke knows to be untrue. He will give Croke no receipt for 47 cr. he has had from him, fearing it might be showed to the King's adversaries, but says that at the end of the cause he will either make him a bill or return the money. Has found him twice stiffly reasoning on the Queen's side with a Florentine friar, who he always assured Croke was of the King's opinion, but now he says he has become his utter enemy. He told Croke that the Emperor's ambassador said to him, Quod si velit procurare pro regina, merces ejus non staret intra paucula scuta; and he added these words, Crede mihi, Croce, posse me efficere, si velim facere quod alii velint et faciunt, ut quicquid hactenus fecerunt pro rege illi magis obsit quam prosit. This comes of Raphael's printed book, of which he has already written. As he can get no more subscriptions either from friar Ambrose or friar Thomas, fear compels him to tell the King that all these friars were first attained by him. Ambrose had, for getting the determination of Padua, 20 cr.; Thomas, 47 cr.; and Francis, for himself and Dionysius, 77 cr. In spite of this, can get nothing from any of them, except Dionysius. Ambrose says that the bishop of London told him to do only what Casale enjoined him. Encloses a copy of letter of Leonicus, mentioning a worse point. Such an order must be prejudicial to the King's cause and to Croke's labor, and also cause the loss of the money which he has laid out upon the friars. If it be true, does not see that he can do any more good in Venice and the parts round. The Bishop knows that his importunate labor has been the principal cause of the success of the King's cause here. Venice, 23 Oct.

27 Oct. 6705. W. BENET to HENRY VIII.

Add. 25,114, f. 36. B. M. Alexander, the courier, arrived on the 3rd, by whom he received a packet from Wellsborn, the King's ambassador in the French court; with it the King's letter to my lord of Worcester, Mr. Gregori, and himself. Also a copy from the French king to the Pope; and his instructions to his ambassador at Rome. The same day cardinal Tarbe took leave of the Pope, who next morning departed to Hostia, before the instruction had reached the French ambassador, much to our discomfort, as he has great authority with the Pope. Consequently the writer and Worcester, on receiving the said copies, resolved to confer with cardinal Tarbe, and communicate their instructions, that in the morning before the Pope's departure he might of himself tell the Pope how he had an inkling that the French king had fully resolved to join with Henry in his great cause, and if the Pope would satisfy Henry, Francis would be greatly obliged; if not, he would take it for an injury, and study to revenge it. Further, the Cardinal was to say that, considering the importance of it, he thought it his duty to urge the Pope to satisfy both Kings, and keep them in devotion to the Holy See; for otherwise he would lose both. De Tarbe did this, as he said, effectuously. The Pope said he thought it was likely, and was sorry he could not remediate it, by satisfying the King's desire; but he would not go beyond the law. On the 5th the French courier arrived, one day before Tarbe had appointed to leave, with a letter commanding him immediately, if he had left, to return, and present his master's letter to the Pope and the instructions contained, with no less diligence than if it touched his own person. On the 8th the Pope returned from Hostia to St. Agatha, at Rome, not being able to reach his palace, "for the great inundation of Tiver, which was so great that it ran through every street in Rome, and in many streets it was above two fathoms deep." On the 10th the water had fallen, so that men might ride in the streets. Then the Cardinal, the bishop of Worcester, conte de Ponte-Rimola, the French ambassador, and the writer went to the Pope to present the French king's letter. The Pope said he perceived by the letter that Francis looked upon this cause as his own, and he would act in it as such, and desired the Pope to grant such expedition as De Tarbe should desire. Hereupon De Tarbe proposed the 1st degree, viz., a commission to my lords of Canterbury, London, and Lincoln. The Pope said that had been asked before, except that another was named instead of the bishop of London.

De Tarbe answered it was the bishop of Exeter; but, if the Pope liked, he would take Exeter instead. The Pope said he spake it not for that purpose. De Tarbe said, in his opinion it was a very reasonable petition, considering the extreme age of the Archbishop, his sincerity, good conscience, great learning, and chiefly that he is chief of the Queen's council, more likely to favor the Queen than the King; "your Highness, therefore, axing the cause to be committed to him, declareth to all the world the sincerity of your conscience, and that your trust resteth only in the justice of your cause." He praised the learning of London and Lincoln, and urged reasons why the cause should be committed to them. The Pope replied, he could give no other answer than what he had given already to this petition;—that "as the Queen had alleged the place suspected, he could not commit it thither again without her consent." If she consented, the Pope was ready to do so. They would get no other answer from him.

Tarbe then proceeded to the 2nd degree:—for a commission to the clergy of the province of Canterbury, showing their learning, and that the chiefs of them, Rochester, Ely, Bath, St. Asaph, and many inferior prelates, were of the Queen's council, and had openly defended her cause;—that the Archbishop, who was at the head of the Convocation, was of her council, and therefore the King did not desire it out of any partiality to himself. The Pope answered, this had often been urged before, and he must make the same reply as to the 1st degree. "Then," said Benet, "your Holiness considers nothing but that the Queen hath alleged the place to be suspected;" which, he urged, was not so; nor could the Queen allege in support of her assertion anything but the King's power in his own realm, and it ought to be showed that there was some act of injustice against the Queen, whereas no man living could show that the King had displayed any displeasure against those who had taken the Queen's part, rather the contrary; and he mentioned the bishop of Durham. That the Pope could not with reason or justice hear the cause at Rome, or commit it to any other place than England, because of the privileges and customs of the realm, which allow no man of the realm to be convented out of it for any cause, and that all appeals to Rome are remitted thither again; and, undoubtedly, the King would not suffer a violation of those prerogatives he was sworn to maintain. The Pope answered, if Benet would allege the same, he should be heard, and have as much as the law allowed. In the end, the Pope said he would do nothing in this matter but what the law allowed, neither for your Highness, the French king, nor the Emperor.

De Tarbe then proceeded to the 3rd degree; viz., if the King should provide a remedy for this great cause, and should follow such means as were approved by learned men and universities in all Christendom, whether the Pope would forbear, directly and indirectly, from molesting him by censures, &c. To this, the Pope said he would consult with his Council. De Tarbe told him it was necessary he should satisfy the King in some of these degrees, or he would see a greater ruin in Christendom than he had seen hitherto. The Pope replied he would be most sorry for that, and would do all he could to prevent it; and if any such ruin did follow, he had liever it should follow for doing his duty than for omitting to do it, and he was unalterably determined to proceed in this matter according to law and justice. He said this in a great fume; but at last asked for a copy of the instructions. The bishop of Tarbe replied, it was not usual to give copies, and he had no special commandment for that purpose. The Pope desired a copy, that he might consult with his Council. De Tarbe said he was willing to read them at any time to his Holiness. On the second day appointed for their answer, the Pope declined one, as they had refused a copy. Then De Tarbe read the instructions, and next day cardinal Ancona made answer in the Pope's presence, stating that as the points consisted in law, he spoke as for the Pope;—that if the Pope could persuade the Queen's proctors, then at Rome, to commit the cause as the King desired, it might be done without grieving any party. They replied, if the Queen consented they should have had no need to solicit the Pope. For the 2nd point, he answered we should come to the signature or consistory, and be heard there. They answered they had no such proxy. He replied they might come as orators with a protestation. They answered they had no such command. Then he repeated that as the cause had been committed to Rome by order of the law, it could not be revoked. They said the advocation was made without the King being called to it, and therefore was ineffectual; but without effect. To the 3rd he said the Pope could not refuse the Queen asking process according to law, except he denied her justice, which he would not do in a case of matrimony, being a sacrament of the Church, and affecting the souls of both.

As they could gain nothing in these degrees, they practised with Tarbe for a further delay, urging him to persuade the Pope, and the Emperor's and king of Hungary's ambassadors, alleging the Queen's health, and stating that if any process was made at her suit, the King would be greatly irritated, and expel her from his company. This was urged by Tarbe so effectually that the ambassadors admitted it, but said they did not dare to delay;—they had written to their masters, and expected an answer. The Pope told De Tarbe he could not delay the process without the consent of the adverse party, but, at his urgent request, suspended it for three weeks, in which time an answer will come from the Emperor. This took place on the day Francis, the courier, arrived. On visiting the Pope the next morning, he asked if they had received any instruction from the King, that in case of suspension of process nothing should be attempted against the Queen in England. They answered they had no such commands, but would write. De Tarbe then spake with him a good while apart, as he said, to urge the Pope to a longer delay, but ineffectually. They urged that the time was too short to obtain an answer from England. Two days after, De Tarbe left for France. After his departure they again went to the Pope to urge the custom of England, and that if the Pope sought to examine it after it had been so long established, he would not do well; for how grievous it would be if a man should ask of him the reason why he, being bishop of Rome, should have jurisdiction in all other churches. He said he saw to what end this matter would flow, and he would prove his jurisdiction better than the King could his custom; adding, in a great fume, he would give them no further audience, except in the presence of his Council. Benet urged him to ponder it well; for there was nothing in law so certain but by seeking the reason of it might be made doubtful. He made his usual answer, that if the world fell to ruins he would rather it did so while he was doing his duty. Seeing his displeasure they proceeded no further, knowing that if he is once brought to an obstinacy, he cannot easily be brought from it. Threats and hard words are of no use, unless the King had an army there, like the Emperor.

The Pope will proceed only according to law; and so far will he favor the King. The Pope has committed to Tarbe certain things for the French king touching the King's cause; what they are he will not say. Shortly after Benet's coming there, the Pope spoke to him of a dispensation for two wives, but so doubtfully, that Benet suspects he spoke it for two purposes; one was that he should break it to the King, and see if it would be accepted, "thereby he should have gotten a mean to bring your Highness to grant that if he might dispense in this case, which is of no less force than your case is, consequently he might dispense in your Highness' case." The other was to entertain the King, and defer the cause. Benet asked the Pope whether he was resolved that he could dispense in that case. He said "No;" but he had been told by a great doctor he might, for the avoidance of a greater scandal; but he would advise further with his Council. Lately he has said plainly, that he cannot do it. Will not omit, with Dr. Carne, to make search for those things the King commanded. Urged the King to use his influence with the Nuncio to get the bishop of Worcester made cardinal, as the bishop of Tarbe has left, and there is none of equal authority to promote the King's causes. Being near kinsman to Ferrour, went with one Snow to him at Evershot. He finally confessed, and gave Bagge 3*l.*, which Bagge gave to a priest in confession, to be redelivered to Chace.

3 Nov. 6713. [CROKE to HENRY VIII.]

Vit. B. XIII. 129 b. B. M. On 19 October sent to the King, by Edmond Harwel, two books printed by Rhaphael Comensis: one, containing two counsels, for and against the King; and the other, one counsel, pretended to be written in the King's favor. The constant rumor here of books printed in English and divulged in England against the King, has furthered Rhaphael's evil intent in setting forth these books. Hears that Luther and others have written against the King. The Lutherans here bark and cry out against him, saying that no marriage is prohibited by Divine law, because all were lawful before the written law, which is now "abrogate and abolete" by the Gospel. Sent also by Harwell two letters to the King, his case printed by his ambassador, copies of letters from Cœlius, Braynus, and Parisius, and excerpts of Greek and Latin, noted partly by the bishop of London, and partly by Croke. Sends these excerpts again, with copies of Cœlius' and Parisius' letters. Would gladly go to Thaurine, if the bishop of London, who is known there as the King's ambassador, had any comfort from those he spake with. Thinks it best to practise here, utterly dissembling to be the King's servant. Dares not as yet adventure upon Cremona, Pavia, Milan, nor Mantua, as the ambassador says that "he wol procure there," which he may easily do by the end of next month, and if Croke goes thither he may say that it has hindered him. Friar Thomas would have given him his counsel, but because he had altered priorem impetum, and written many things ambiguously which might be construed in favor of the Pope's dispensing power, would not take it until these points were amended. Friar Dionysius says that his resort to the Emperor's ambassador is on behalf of his exiled brother. He has two counsels here in favor of the King's cause, with sundry subscriptions, but Croke cannot get them. Will know how all matters frame when father Francis comes; meantime dissembles with all men. Rhaphael's book has infinitely hurt men's towardness. Asks the King to provide remedies against the evils he has mentioned. Venice, 3 Nov.

Encloses a letter of 27 Oct., by which the King will see that he has hopes of recovering the great loss [of the determination of] Ferrara by means of a friar "longing to" . . . . . ., about which "let" he wrote from Ferrara, on 30 Sept. and 4 Oct., "by An . . . . . to Genyn, the curriar, dwelling without Temple Bar," and letters from . . . . . [by] Edmond Harwel, 18 Oct. Now sends [by] Pandulphus Cynamye, correspondent to Anthony Bonvice, the duplicates [of the said] letters, and two books printed by Rhaphael Comensis. Sends copies of Braynus' and Parisius' letters to Hannibal, and Hannibal's to Croke, keeping the originals, and also those of letters from Sir Gregory, Crusinus, and father Francis, "for the probation . . . . . against partial report." Wishes all he sends to be kept secret, "for where[as on my coming to Venice] I resorted, by my lord of London's commandment, unto . . . . . house to demand certain counsels that my said Lord left with [him, he desiring] to speak with me, sent me by his chaplain this message, that is to say . . . . . amplius domum ipsius, ne haberet occasionem male merendi de me for . . . . . as I had written unto your Highness against him, whereof he said he [had the proofs] ready, and that he was promised to have out of England shor[tly] . . . . . part by copy, part of mine own hand."

[Matters] are so handled in Croke's absence, that he dares not depa[rt] lest all miscarry, and tarrying here he does no good, or very [little]. Fears the King will not find a remedy until Croke has spoken to him. The [rumor] of books printed in English, "setteth forth marvellously the mischievous intent of [Rhaphael] in printing this book, whom, if your Highness cause not shortly t[o forbear] other by the Senate or by the Pope, in cujus breve apertissime . . . . . Has importuned the Pope a thousand times about the two points remaining in the memorial touching the separation of the king and queen of England, and for the new inhibition against the King proceeding to marry de facto, "y haseme defendido con el mal de Anchona." Today he sent for Ancona and the English ambassadors in my presence to come to the palace, but, owing to the entry of the duke of Albany, the interview did not take place. The minute has already been drawn that the universities should assemble lawfully, and give their opinions and reasons. Order has been taken to this effect for Padua and Bologna, and even for Paris. * * "I think that all delay his Holiness can cause to the king of England in his matrimonial cause is well justified, provided that no injustice be done, and the Emperor be not offended; of which his Holiness will take care. I say this deliberately, for I do not doubt that if this demand (of the king of England) in this matrimonial cause is superseded, it is for some purpose which God will direct for the best. I hear that the King makes all efforts that his cause be decided in England in his favor; and as he sees that those who are to take part in the diet are not in his favor (a suo preposito), and perhaps doubting that sentence will be given earlier in Rome than in England, he makes this demand to delay the process. I hear from a person who has come from there (England), that that man (questo homo) is at present more obstinate in the matter than ever, and all that is done from here (France?) is insufficient to change the mind of the King. I think, however, that a letter ought to be written to his Holiness, asking him to defer the despatch of an answer from Rome."

Le Grand, III. 527.

Has communicated to the King the substance of his letter of the 23rd, who was greatly pleased with it, and trusted that if Mons. de Noircarmes or De Robadanges had carried from the Emperor to Francis a thing of any consequence his good brother would have informed him. He desired Francis most urgently to write as often as possible about himself and his mother, and of any news that might occur. In a long conversation I had with the King that day, and again yesterday, he appeared anxious for a familiar meeting with Francis without ceremony. He thinks he will cross the sea, and that the interview might be had about Ardres; but I passed this over on both occasions without reply, the thing being of so great importance. I was also not certain how far it would serve your interests. For the rest I refer you to letters to the King and the bishop of Bayonne about the danger (caso) of the Cardinal. London, 8 Nov. 1530.

P.S.—I have delayed this despatch to learn more about the poor Cardinal; concerning whom the King, and the lords of his Council, have assured me, with oaths, that they have not the slightest suspicion of me, but have every good opinion, and hold me as a dear servant. Norfolk and Suffolk have begged me firmly to believe it; but as to the Cardinal, I fear he cannot do well. They say they have many important causes against him; and the King says he has intrigued against them, both in and out of his kingdom, and has told me where and how, and that one and perhaps more of his servants have discovered it, and accused him. I am much grieved for his danger. Norfolk yesterday spoke a word to me about the proposed interview, so that it seems there is plenty of inclination on this side; but the thing is so important I do not know what to say. I have just received your letter of the 3rd, and in answer may say that I have given to the King the packet addressed to him, who thanks you for your diligence. They have letters from Rome of the 24th ult., which are later than these. As to the pension of the marquis of Ossester (Exeter), Francis, I think, has done well to make it die with the the person. 10 Nov. 1530.

The 18th of . . . , on information had from the King's most faithful servant . . . . . [that] Raphael Comensis had anew written against him, and [would] inscribe his work to the Pope, thought good to confer with him. He gloried in what he had done, saying that he would neither be nor seem to be a traitor to the [Emperor]. Reminded him that by such incons[tancy, and] often writing contrary to himself, he might be noted [to] destain his gravity and honesty. To which he replied [that it could] not be gathered from his work that anything that he [wrote for] the King was his opinion. When Croke alleged to him [the book] late printed, and the epistle sent to the King, he [said] that there was no such epistle printed by his co[nsent], for he gave it in writing and sealed [to the ambassa]tor, who gave him 8 cr. for doing so. Encloses a copy of the letter which he gave Croke. Fears Cassalis has altered many things in the epistle and work. There is not one book or epistle of them put [forth]. Rhaphael himself could not get one. [By] report of the printer there were but four epistles printed . . . . four printed in Italian. The Prothonotary stood [by while they were printing, and with his own hands brake the for[ms], threatening the printer with death if he discovered it to Croke. Sends a bill of all the doctors' n[ames] of the college of Padua, that the King may see how ma[ny] lack. As yet nothing is done collegialiter. All the college would gladly Simonetus desired Croke to promise the King up . . . . . that after Christmas he would send his book in the King's favor. He g[ave] Croke a letter from the ambassador, of which he sends a copy. And in the bill of doctors I have * * * Sends a copy of letters from Cœlius, showing the difficulty that there will be at Ferrara, and how Sir Gregory has promised the Duke's factor, who had the determination taken away, that the King will not be displeased with the Duke on account of it. Thus they never cease to "appeare" the fruit of his diligence. Is going to speak to Parisius, who has sent for him on matters concerning the cause. Padua, 20 Nov.

Hopes that the ambassador has gone to the towns of which he discharged Croke, for no one here knows what is become of him. Told him, before witnesses, that unless he did shortly some good there himself, he would accuse him before the King of forbidding him so that nothing might be done. "What he hath done at Padua, your Highness by the bill of names written unto me with the hand of a doctor being one of the judges of Padua, and by the same that he with much less difficulty a twelvemonth since might have done all that he hath done now, and much more." The correction sent to the King, by friar Ambrose, of the instrument of Padua, hinders the obtaining of the corrections which the King wants. Doubts not it would have been in much more available form, if he had not been forbidden to be privy to the getting of it. Will, however, try. The Emperor's letters to the friars are credentials for his ambassador, and promise of remembrance to those who favor his cause.

Harl. 296, f. 38. B. M. St. P. VII. 211.

I received at Blois, on the 19th, your letters under signet, dated York Place, 11 Nov., stating the detestable practices and conspiracies set forth by Wolsey, at Rome and within your realm, against your dignity. After I had studied them well I visited the Grand Master, who inquired, what news from England? and I learned from him that news had been received from the ambassador in England,—that the Cardinal was in hold, but for what offence he knew not; that the King (Francis), however, thought he deserved imprisonment. I told him that I had been sent to prevent any untrue surmises, with a letter from you to Francis and my Lady, desiring them that in event of hearing of this matter otherwise than was good, they should know the truth, "showing him that if the particularities, which I said did chiefly concern presumptuous sinister practices made to court of Rome for reducing him to his former estate and dignity, contrary to his faith, truth, duty and allegiance, were so well known to the King your brother, my lady and him, as they were to your Highness, there were no doubt but he and they would much abhor the same." He replied, they judged you to be so just a prince that you would not have punished the Cardinal but for his heinous deserts. He then took me to dinner with him, where dined the cardinal of Lorraine, the marquis of Saluce, the count St. Pôl, the count de Taunte, and the Imperial ambassador, "who showed to me there very good countenance, howsoever he thought."

After dinner the Great Master brought him to Francis. The Imperial ambassador would have addressed the King first, but the latter rose out of his chair, saying, "You must pardon me, I will first speak with the King my brother's ambassador, and after with you." This was done in the face of the whole of the Court, chiefly Italians. Repeated to him what he had said about Wolsey to the Grand Master, who replied, in behalf of Francis, that the love between the two Kings was so firm that nothing could persuade him to give credence to any tales against the King's honor; nevertheless "it was done like a very natural brother to advertise him of the truth." He then asked me the particulars of the offences;—which I said I knew not as yet; but your Highness would advertise him of the whole. He accepted this very well, saying he ever thought "that so pompous and ambitious a heart, sprung out of so vile a stock, would once show forth the baseness of his nature, and most commonly against him that hath raised him from low degree to high dignity as ye have done; and said he thought by his outrageous misbehaviours he had well merited other a life worse than death, or else of all deaths the most cruel." I think that De Vaux, his ambassador in England, has done well in disclosing the misdemeanour of the Cardinal. Speaking of the Pope, he said he would do no otherwise than as the Emperor wished him, and that he heard he was greatly incensed because of an order that none of your subjects should make suit to Rome in any matter without your licence. I told him this was no more than a proclamation for the execution of statutes devised by Parliament concerning the wealth of your commons, and the Pope's just prerogatives had not been impaired; and I urged, if the Pope out of malice should attempt to publish anything in France to your prejudice, that he would not suffer it. He vehemently asserted he should not. Has desired Francis to thank the cardinal Gramont for his services at Rome, and told him you were informed the said Cardinal had some other device for the furtherance of your cause which he would first open to your said brother. Francis said there should be no subject of his but would study as much the advancement of the King's interests as of his. He looked for the arrival of De Tarbes in six or seven days, and would let me know his suggestion.

Cannot discover that there is any towardness for a meeting between Francis and the Emperor. Asked the Great Master, who said fools did babble they wist not what. As to the proposal for a General Council, Francis says he thought it right not altogether to refuse, if an indifferent place were chosen. Francis has also told him, of his own accord, how the Venetian ambassador lately advised him to write to Henry, urging him to desist from his great matter as a thing that might not lawfully be done. To which he had replied that he spake unlearned, the matter having been examined by a great number of clerks in France and Italy, most of whom were on the King's side. The ambassador observed in answer, "that ever the most number were fools." "Then," said Francis, "your commonwealth of Venice, which is ordered by the most number, by your saying is governed by many fools." At this, according to Francis, he was much abashed, "showing me he was so aged he was waxen a child again, doating for age." Neither Pope, Emperor, nor Signory, should prevent him, he said, from acting in the King's behalf. Blois, the 21st day.

Bradford, 319. The rumor that the King intends, in the coming Parliament at the Purification V. M., something touching the divorce, and the tediousness of the process, have induced the Queen to write to you to intercede for her with the Pope, according to the memorial presented by Mr. May. Delay is prejudicial to her cause. A book is being printed, against the meeting of Parliament, in favor of the King, in order to gain the people. The Dean of the Chapel, in the King's behalf, has presented eight instruments to the archbishop of Canterbury, respecting the divorce; two from Paris, the others from Toulouse, Orleans, Burgos, Bologna, Padua, and Pavia. They are likely to publish these documents, as they have more influence than any book. If they do, it will be better to get attestation of the votes in favor of the Queen, and circulate some books, as Fisher's was circulated in Spain. Some thought he would be annoyed, and feared the King's displeasure; but the King has shown himself quite indifferent. I have commissioned May to get the Bishop's two later books printed, and will distribute them at the opening of Parliament.

F. = book

A few days since, the duchess of Norfolk sent the Queen a present of "volaille" and an orange, enclosing a letter from Gregory Cassal, which I send. The Queen thinks the Duchess did this out of regard for her, but I fear it was done with the knowledge of her husband, as a means of entering into some secret communication with her Majesty more easily.

Eight days ago the King gave orders for the Cardinal to be brought here; on which the Cardinal remained for some days without food, hoping rather to finish his life in this way than in a more shameful one, of which he had some fears. He has been taken ill on the road, and has not arrived. It is said he is to be lodged in the same chamber in the Tower where the duke of Buckingham was detained. The cause of his arrest is a mere conjecture. A gentleman told me that a short time ago the King was complaining to his Council of something that was not done according to his liking, and said in a rage that the Cardinal was a better man than any of them for managing matters; and repeating this twice, he left them. The Duke, the lady, and the father have not ceased since then to plot against the Cardinal; especially the lady, who does not cease to weep and regret her lost time and her honor, threatening the King that she would leave him,—in such sort that the King has had much trouble to appease her; and though the King prayed her most affectionately, even with tears in his eyes, that she would not speak of leaving him, nothing would satisfy her except the arrest of the Cardinal. It was pretended that he had written to Rome to be reinstated in his possessions, and to France for its favor, and was returning to his ancient pomp, and corrupting the people. But since they have had the Cardinal's physician† in their hands, they have found what they sought for. Since he has been here the same physician has lived in the duke of Norfolk's house like a prince. He is singing the tune as they wished him.

Wolsey

Joachin would not say a word about it to the Papal nuncio, but he told the Venetian ambassador, that, according to the confession of the Cardinal's physician, the Cardinal had solicited the Pope to excommunicate the King if he did not banish the lady from the court, and treat the Queen with due respect. He hoped by this to raise the country, and obtain the management. Joachin protested against the malice of the Cardinal; but I do not know whether he did so to conceal his chagrin at the Cardinal's arrest, or out of spite for his anxiety to prevent this second marriage. I think the physician must have declared he had no intelligence with me; otherwise the Duke, who is a bad dissembler, would have said something about it. They might also have summoned the person who was the go-between, to whom the physician wrote, and who sent him the answers; but up to this time not a word has been said about it. Were the physician to say all that passed between us he could not do anything to impugn me. It is said the king of France will object to the summoning of a Council. The earl of Wiltshire has been obliged to retract the promise made by him to the duke of Milan of obtaining a loan from the King of 50,000 crowns. Certain deputies have arrived here from Scotland. The Lutheran merchants have been no otherwise punished than by being paraded through the streets, and being compelled to burn their books; so where one spoke of them before, 100 speak of them now. The King wishes not only for an authentic copy of the documents I have referred to, but to have them translated; and the translator had notice from the earl of Wiltshire that the King wished to have the translation made in the King's own favor by enlarging upon it wherever it might seem advisable. Add. 28,582, f. 83. B. M.

Is glad the Emperor was satisfied with the delay agreed to, at the petition of the Pope, in the cause of England. We will now follow the terms of the plea (seguiremos los terminos del pleito) without further interruption, as the Pope has promised never again to propose a suspension. Nevertheless, he has letters from his Nuncio there, showing that the King is so dissatisfied with his Holiness that he threatens to take pen in hand, and rouse up other princes against the Pope. But he is informed that the Parliament is prorogued, and he thinks it is only to terrify the poor Queen, and keep the matter in suspense. Among those here who have given opinions in the King's favor is a converted Jew, named Marc Gabriel, and the King has provided to give him as much money as he requires, and to send him thither. Fears that with the opinions he has got, and with the presence of this man [in England], the King will persuade his Parliament that with their consent he may marry de facto. * * * The Nuncio in England has written to his Holiness, that, in talking with the king of England about the going of the Landgrave, and afterwards of that of the duke of Saxony, the King said no one would be bold enough to do the same in his dominions. I said to his Holiness that neither would they in Spain nor in your other kingdoms, not from fear, but from pure loyalty to your Majesty, whom they idolise (quasi idolatran en V.M.); but in Germany this going was not wonderful, for the very act of flight was significant of their dread of you; but they do not do so in England, as we learn from their ancient histories, but mutiny for any occasion or for none, and often lay their hands upon their kings; and that Henry is the most perilous king in the world. I told this to his Holiness, that he might not regard his threats. Rome, 28 Nov. 1530.

Theiner, p. 594. Is informed that James archbp. of St. Andrew's would have been appointed Papal Legate, had he not been prevented by the duke of Albany. Has always objected to him as unfit for such an authority. As it is necessary that the chancellor, treasurer, and other ecclesiastics should sit in criminal causes, begs the Pope to grant faculties to William Stewart, provost of Lynclowden, and others, for that purpose. 30 Nov. 6742. RODRIGO NIÑO to CHARLES V.

Add. 28,582, f. 102. B. M. Since I wrote on the 20th, I have endeavored to learn who had gone to England about the marriage of the Princess to the duke of Milan. I find it is that same Prothonotary Casal who was ambassador here for the King, to whom, and to his brother the knight, it is said the Duke has promised to give a grand house (grand casa de renta) in the duchy of Milan if the matter take effect. I am assured that he is gone to be employed in this matter, and the negociation is to proceed by letting the King know what I have written to your Majesty. His journey is on the pretext of delivering to the King all that he has been able to do against the queen of England, and to show the King that it is he who has done everything, and not the bishop of London, nor Croke, who is still intriguing here as much as he can. The prior of St. John and St. Paul has delivered to me the opinion he had made against the Queen, and has promised not to give it to the English, but do what he can to retract it, and endeavor to get the others who have written against her to do the like; and as I promised to send you his opinion, folded up and sealed just as he gave it me, he says he has written within a letter to you, and sends the copy of the brief given by the Pope, in which he says he has written to your Majesty not to send Mr. Mai to him, but some one who could examine the case theologically, and see that the substance of the whole is what has been written here, because that prior is the person with whom the bishop of London negociated most. Recommends the Emperor to write a letter to the prior, accepting his services, and charging him henceforth to obey Niño's instructions, without naming the king or queen of England. I hope to send you shortly another opinion made by our opponents. Has great fear the king of England, with the authority of the bishops of his kingdom, will obtain the divorce de facto, and not care to litigate the case in the Rota. This is what his agents say he will do. * * * Venice, 30 Nov. '30.

30 Nov. 6745. CROKE to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Records of the Reformation, i. 462.

Went to see Parisius at Padua in consequence of the persuasion of his friends, who said it would be for no little preferment of the King's cause. He first showed Croke the Emperor's letters, requiring him to counsel for the Queen, and said that he had a special command from the Senate not to meddle in the King's favor. This order he imputed to Vincent de Russo, dean of the College of lawyers at Padua, whom the Prothonotary brought to Stokesley, and who immediately noised throughout Padua that the case was between the King and Queen, and hindered the matter all he could. Before this rumor, Parisius said that he would gladly have given his counsel for 80 cr. He told Croke that the Senate had cited Mark de Mantua for writing in the King's favor, and blamed the indiscretion of Dr. Antonius ab Angelo, who openly offered money, in the common hall at Padua, to all doctors who would subscribe the counsel,—not regarding whether they were learned or unlearned, canonist or civilian. This, Parisius bade him show the King, was very slanderous, not only to the subscriptions, but to the cause. Judged that these reports of his came from the desire of his own advancement, as he said that Francischinus de Curta had 60 cr. to hold his peace, until he [Croke] heard from divers sad men who love and honor the King, that they lament this handling of the King's cause. The doctors who have not subscribed will not now do so, being afraid in consequence of the citing of Mark de Mantua. Many of the Imperialists boast that the king of England has only rascals to subscribe for him, and yet was obliged to give them money. These and other words made the vicar of the potestate of Padua break his promise to subscribe; and his example alone would have won 100, for he has borne room in most of the great cities belonging to the Signory. The King must earnestly expostulate with the Signory "for forbidding them that hath taken earnest of your Highness not to write for the same." Parisius bade Croke show the King that if he were discharged of their commands and the Emperor's requests, he would gladly write for the King; or if the King will give him 1,500 cr. a year by an abbey or prebend, he will forsake the Venetians and Emperor, and serve the King in Rome. Is purposely destitute of money, that he may do nothing in the King's cause, but hopes shortly to bring a number of subscriptions. Venice, 30 Nov.

6746. HENRY SAVELL to LORD HUSEY.

I thank you for your letter. I presume you have spoken with my wife's friends, and they will "sew the law." The truth is, they have no such cause, and I trust no man of conscience shall have, to reverse the judgment given at York; for they were her friends and my enemies, until judgment came by wrong information given by her father to them, which appears by their letters sent from the Dean to my lord Cardinal in their favor, which put me to pain at the time. I can give you no answer, if I will agree to have it at Stamford, until I speak with my counsel; "and I shall promise you, Sir, it shall cost me that as I may make, and whilst I live I will take her as my wife, and never agree to the contrary, and ever follow the law as I may to attain her. But the effect of my business is caused by my lord Darcy, as ye know; and I beseech you to show him, if it please him to remember, I am his kinsman; and they shall make no information but ever I shall approve that there is no craft in me, but that all my meaning is to get the truth tried out. Sir, if my lord Darcy would be good to me, I trust I should do him or his as great pleasure as they will do; and I am of his blood, and it is no honor to him for malice to put me to trouble that would be glad to do him pleasure, and also it is great conscience this to withhold my wife; and my belief is, afore a year be passed, both he and I shall be judged where the judge shall know the intent of every one of us. And it please you, I would be glad ye could make him my good lord, though ye put me to some pain."

R. O. 13. Account of cloths of issue and cloths of gold delivered to the late lord Cardinal by John Cavalcanty and Peter Francis de Barde, of which they never received any part.

i. Money paid at Rome for the bulls of Durham eight years ago, as appears by a reckoning delivered to Wolsey by Cromwell, and by a bill signed and sealed by Wolsey himself, 175*l.* For 2 pieces of cloth of gold delivered to him at the More, as appears by an indenture drawn by Master Stevens and signed by himself, 140*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* For 2 pieces of crimson silk camlet delivered to him in his gallery at York's Place, 21*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* For the balance of an account with Cavalcanti on 15 Feb. 1520 [1521], 87*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* For 311½ yards rich cloth of gold for the church, of divers colors, at 30*s.* a yard, and 195½ yards of a coarser cloth of gold, delivered at York's Place, as appears by a bill of Dr. Stubbes, 630*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.*

Total, 1,054*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*; which sum was demanded of the Cardinal when he was at Asher by Antony Carsydony, factor of the above merchants. Then Wolsey acknowledged the debt, except 500 marks, which he said should be deducted from the above parcel of 630*l.*, as they had agreed to give him that sum "for a pleasure" in the above-mentioned tissues. To this Carsydony answered that they had promised to abate 500 marks in the price of the tissues; which they had already done, as could be proved by the quality of the stuff. On this Wolsey begged that the restoring of the 630*l.* might be deferred till the return of De Barde to England; which was agreed to. For the rest Wolsey promised to sue to the King for payment; and undertook that if the King would not pay it, he would do it himself. He further said that although the King had all the said cloths of tissues, he was very loth at that time to sue to him, having already given notice to the King and Council of the "said sum of 425*l.*" amongst other sums due by him to his creditors, which he hoped the King would pay.

ii. Petition to the King by the said merchants for payment, considering their long suit and charges.

Asks him to go with the poor resydenciary (?) to the Chancellor for declaration of the circumstances, and for discharging them and my . . . . . yse. To avoid the danger they would incur by . . . . being conveyed hence further, asks him to desire the lords to be contented with this examination, or else to [commit it to] some gentleman of this country. * * *

The Chancellor ought to be contented with this order, as the people are so wilful that they cannot be resisted by Wolsey's officers. The confession taken will inform them of all the circumstances.

Contrary to all law and conscience, Mr. Uttered has taken a half year's rent [of] Kexby, due at Michelmas last, [and] hath sent for the other half year due at Whitsuntide last past, threatening that he will exsp[el them] out of their holds if they refuse. Asks him to provide some remedy.

R. O. 6752. ERNEST DUKE OF LUNENBURG.

The Duke has understood by yesterday's oration how much the King favors the liberty of Germany. The Duke perceives that the speech was divided into three parts:—1, to induce him and his allies not to accept terms from the Emperor;—2, not to agree to the election of the king of the Romans; (the worship of God is concerned in the first, and the liberty of Germany in the second;)—and, 3, that if they should be harshly treated, they should submit the matter to the arbitration of Henry VIII. and Francis I. Is directed to reply as follows:—1. The prince Elector, the Duke and his other adherents, have sufficiently explained the justice of their cause in their letters to the King, and the Duke remains firm in his resolve to abide by the Confession [of Augsburg] (professio cœptæ veritatis). The corrupt state of the hierarchy, both in life and doctrine, has compelled them to appeal to a General Council. 2. He does not see that he can do anything to hinder the election, nor is it his business; but as his uncle the duke of Saxony, to whom the right of electing this King belongs, has all along opposed the election, and protested its nullity, he will continue to take part with him in not recognising Ferdinand as king of the Romans. 3. As to the arbitration (compromissum), though the Duke has great confidence in the kings of England and France, a matter concerning the common faith of Christians must be determined according to God's Word, and with the cognizance of the whole world; nor can the Protestants withdraw from the profession they have repeatedly made before the whole world, or submit the cause to any other appeal (vel in angustiorem locum causa cogatur); but if even a free Council cannot be obtained, and their adversaries meditate violence, whatever the King thinks best in the interest of God's Word, the tranquillity of Christendom, and the liberty of Germany, the Duke will be ready to accomplish.

6753. JOHN ARCHBISHOP OF PALERMO and DE LALAING COUNT OF HOGHSTRATE to CHARLES V.

Lady Margaret died tonight, between 12 and 1, after taking the sacrament. Des Barres will give him a letter from her. Have sealed her coffers, and written to Nassau and Berghes, who, with Hoghstrate and others, are her executors, to attend to the performance of her will, and to provide for the Emperor's affairs here. Have written also to Buren, Beures, and Fyennes to come hither. Will send Des Barres with the duplicate of her will, when Nassau and Berghes arrive. Have informed the people on the frontiers of France, England, and Gueldres, that they may be on their guard. Malines, 1 Dec. 1530.

6754. VAUGHAN to CROMWELL.

Since his repair to these parts six days ago, has not learned much about the matters of which Cromwell spoke to him before his departure,—partly because he had occasion immediately to go to Brussels to expedite the affairs of the Merchants Adventurers in the Chancery there, partly because he feared to broach his purpose prematurely, lest his policy should be prevented. My lady Margaret died today. Could not inform Cromwell, before he left England, what goods might be profitably exported to these parts. It would be a good time now to send grain, which is much enhanced in price from the inundations. Will remember the other matter. Antwerp, 1 Dec. 1530.

4 Dec. 6757. CHAPPUYS to CHARLES V.

Bradford, 331.

The bishop of Rochester has finished a book in favor of the Queen, now sent. Tuesday, St. Andrew's Eve, Norfolk told the papal Nuncio that the King wished the cardinal's hat for the auditor of the Chamber, and was very angry he had heard nothing about it, and that the Pope had spoken to his ambassador of his banishing the lady from court, &c. The Nuncio apologized, and said he did not wish to communicate the news to the King, as he did not wish to hear any more of the complaints and menaces the King was in the habit of using. The Pope had heard of the King's conduct, and he had written to the Nuncio that he should henceforth make no more excuses, as he had done enough for the King already;—that it was impossible in the face of the world to delay matters any longer, and justice must be done. The Duke thanked him, and begged him not to make any unpleasant report. The Nuncio knows that I have told your Majesty that mildness aggravates these people, and harshness softens them. So long as the Pope acted graciously they upbraided him,—now he has tightened the reins they are more humble. The Nuncio has therefore told the Pope he must maintain his authority, and conclude the Queen's business.

The cardinal of York died on St. Andrew's Day, at a place where king Richard was killed. They are both buried in the same church, which the people call The Tyrants' Sepulchre. At first the Cardinal refused to take nourishment; afterwards he took or was given something to hasten his end. On Monday the captain of the guard arrived to conduct him hither. Soon afterwards he was taken ill, lingered till Wednesday, and then prepared for his end like a good Christian. On taking the sacrament he protested he had never done anything to the prejudice of his Sovereign. The King still retains his benefices. London, 4 Dec. 1530.

of twenty days was to be perpetual. I said to his Holiness he had as little reason in this as in the principal cause. Still they go on threatening to do something new. I will follow the cause by your order. From Spain they have sent a treatise of the marriage of prince Arthur, which comes very opportunely, and contains all that is wanted. They have not sent that about her marriage with the other brother Henry ("lo de quando se casa con el otro hermano," &c.), nor the bull of dispensation. I have written again to the president, who, however, writes that Ortis is coming. I have written already how the duke of Ferrara secreted the seals (desvio los sellos), which the English ambassadors had been seeking for in his lands, and now I am told the duke of Mantua has done the same. Rodrigo Ninyo writes to me that he does not think it advisable to take out a brief which had been agreed upon, to allow the universities of Bologna and Padua to give their opinions, because he fears they will give them against us. And I am of the same opinion, for there is certainly more to lose than to gain, especially as it is known how their opinions were obtained. The money they spend gets them as many opinions as they require. I hear that the English ambassador, searching in the Papal library, has found something to the contrary of his purpose. I shall find out what it is. * * *

Burnet, vol. VI. p. 41.

Although the King finds that his demands, however just and reasonable, are put aside, that the requests of the French king in his behalf are of no avail, that the intercession of his nobles is not only despised but derided, and that nothing whatever is done for the King's relief,—although he sees all these things more clearly than he likes, both by the King's ambassadors at Rome and by the Pope's here,—the result seems so opposed to common sense, and the King's own knowledge of the facts of his case, that sometimes he cannot believe the Pope to have done what he knows he has done. Who could have believed his Holiness would have denied his petition for judges in England? Certainly the King expected otherwise; as did also the French king, who backed his request, and his councillors, who advised him so to do; also the whole nobility and leading men in England. Quotes St. Cyprian and St. Bernard in favor of terminating a dispute where it was begun. The Pope shows by his acts before all the world that he is wholly devoted to the Emperor's will, and that he ordains, prorogues, and alters things to serve the times. The Queen's simple assertion that England is an unsafe place to judge the cause, is credited in opposition to the clearest documents and facts that cannot deceive. When there was any doubt about the matter judges were sent to England by the Pope; but now, when there is none, the Pope believes the very reverse of what has been proved. The King has shown clearly how safely the cause might be judged in England, by allowing to every one perfect liberty of speech; while the Queen only asserts the contrary, and has produced no evidence that it is so.

Wishes the Pope would declare in writing the reason he persists in denying Henry's suit. Thinks it will be best in such a grave matter that they should communicate their views to each other by formal demands and replies. Demands, therefore, once more of the Pope that he will allow the cause to be decided in England by the judges named by his ambassadors* as indifferent. Understands the Pope made no difficulty about them, but only about the place, which has been already settled by the decrees of Councils (quem sacra Consilia jam diffiniverunt), and the authority of St. Cyprian and St. Bernard. It will certainly be difficult to maintain the Queen's objection, and the infamy it ascribes to the King is intolerable; even in a mean man it would be a scandalous sin, which the Pope ought not to impute to Henry without a witness.

* In Pocock's Burnet the reading is "quos inter oratores tanquam indifferentes et æquissimos nominabamus." The two words in italics are mutilated in the MS. from which Burnet and Mr. Pocock printed. In Theiner the first word is per, and the second nominabimus. But the reading in the original draft was certainly nominabamus.

Does not wish to judge the Pope's conduct rashly; but if he approves, or does not openly reprove, what has been done by his ambassadors, these things are very serious charges against him, For the Pope first endeavored to prevent any one freely declaring his opinion of the King's cause; then, when after repeated solicitations he by published letters allowed every one to write and say what they thought of it, his functionaries (magistratus vestri), even in the Pope's name, threatened many persons at Bologna and elsewhere, if they should write against his power. Moreover, the Imperial ambassadors everywhere in Italy, especially in the Pope's dominions, use threats in contempt of the Papal edict, to make those who have written in the King's cause recant; and by some conspiracy the King's letters are not allowed to pass freely. The French king also has informed Henry that the Papal ambassador in France has pronounced, and in the name of his Holiness, a strong opinion upon Henry's cause, not fearing impudently to lie* to such a Prince in saying that the King had no right on his side, whereas the Pope has acknowledged that he has a most righteous case.

If, then, the Pope desire his own rights to be respected, let him not interfere with those of Henry. Let him not receive appeals to Rome in the King's cause, but remit them into England; and if he has passed these inhibitions, let him revoke them. Let him not suppose that either the King or his nobles will allow the fixed laws of his kingdom to be set aside.

Finally, let the Pope regard his demands on their own merits, if not out of respect for Henry. He only seeks to preserve that which is his own. He seeks what is in accordance with the laws of the Church, the authority of Councils, and the opinion of St. Cyprian and St. Bernard. He seeks it because the laws of England will not suffer the contrary, and he himself abhors contention. But he will not brook denial.

He has written not only to the Pope, but to all the members of the Sacred College, asking them to grant his desire. His Holiness proposed them on Friday last, and recommended them warmly. He seemed really to wish that the Auditor should have the cardinal's hat. Was not present. Was much scandalized when he heard of this affair. Thinks the Auditor is a very bad man, and behaves as an enemy of the Emperor in the divorce case of the queen of England. Begged the ambassador and Musetula to speak with the Pope, and to tell him that it would reflect dishonor on the cause of God and the Apostolic See if 'that man' were honored and elevated to so high rank, and that the Emperor would have good reason to be astonished. If the king of England had asked to make one of his subjects a cardinal, a man of good conduct, and a scholar, his Holiness would be right in doing his will; but as the demand is made in favor of an Italian, the king of England has no reason to be offended if it is not granted.

"Made the same observations to Sanga, and asked him to repeat them to the Pope. The Pope answered the ambassador and Musetula, that what they said was perfectly just, and that he did not propose the candidates of the king of England with the intention to make them really cardinals. Such intention, he protested, he had never had, nor would ever have.

"Begged the ambassador to speak with some of the elder cardinals, and to request them to vote against the candidates of the king of England in the Consistory [which will assemble the next day. All these manœuvres are necessary to prevent the creation of these cardinals; for the Pope is, in small things, the most reserved man he has seen, and his thoughts are as difficult to read as though they were written in cipher. Has often been on the point to ask the Emperor to send him (the writer) to Naples, because it pains him to see 'the secresy, the malice, the fear, and the cowardice' of the Pope. Has, however, not done so, because he thinks that the Pope is, in great affairs of state, such a reliable friend and father of the Emperor. That reconciles him.

"Suspects that the Pope has been pleased with the demand of the king of England, as, if he rejects the prayer of the king of England, he has a good reason also to refuse his (the Emperor's) requests. The excuse of the Pope for not doing what the king of England has asked him is that the General Council being so near at hand, it would be inopportune to create new cardinals. This excuse holds as good against the Emperor as against the king of England, but other reasons will be found to keep off the king (of England) and the Auditor.

"The day of the date of this letter the English ambassador came to visit him, and told him that his King had the creation of the Auditor much at heart, but would waive the claims of the other, Casale.

However, card. de Osma advises that some cardinals be spoken to in the Emperor's interest. It was further proposed that the Pope should prohibit all judges who are dependent on him from taking cognizance of this law suit. The decision was postponed until the next Consistory in order to give time to the Cardinals well to consider their votes.

6772. SECRET CONSISTORY OF CARDINALS.

"On Friday, 23 Dec., a Secret Consistory was held in the Apostolic Palace at Rome, in the usual room, in which Consistory was debated and concluded what follows, viz. :—

"My lord the most reverend cardinal Cibo read the letter of the most serene king of England, directed to his Holiness, and dated the 7th of the current month of December. The king of England complains in this letter very much that it has been impossible for him to obtain from the Pope an order that his matrimonial cause be proceeded with out of Rome. Adducing many new reasons, he begged that it be decided in England.* Nothing was concluded on this subject, and no votes were taken, the Pope declaring that this business ought to be ripely discussed, and treated with the greatest consideration in future Consistories.

"The Pope ordered then that the Cardinals should give their votes on the report made by the reverend Paulus de Capisuccis, in the Consistory of the 14th of the same month, concerning the matrimonial cause which was pending between the king and queen of England. The procurators of the Queen had asked that the Pope should forbid the archbishop of Canterbury, by a special brief, to take cognizance of this lawsuit, in case he should be applied to, as it had been reserved for the decision of the Sacred College of Cardinals. The procurators of the queen of England had likewise asked that the Pope should repeat and confirm in a brief all the inhibitions which the auditors of the Rota, to whom this cause was entrusted, had directed to all prelates of England. The same procurators had further petitioned that the Pope should forbid the king of England, whilst the lawsuit was pending, either to cohabit with any other woman, and especially a certain lady Anne, or to contract marriage; and in case that such a marriage should be contracted, to declare it null and void. Lastly, the same procurators had prayed that the Pope should forbid the said lady Anne, and all women in general, to contract, lite pendente, marriage with the king of England. After long deliberations it was concluded that all the afore-mentioned petitions were justifiable in law, and that the briefs should be granted.

Add. MS. 28,579, f. 289. B. M. * * * "The consul in Lyons states that he has had letters from the consul in England, Francesco Bardi, who informs him that the Florentine merchants (in England) have collected money. As they are few and not rich, they have collected only 1,060 scudi, which sum they have sent to Lyons to the hands of the consul. The money is expected soon to arrive. Will do the same with it as he has done with the 4,000 scudi.

"Francesco Bardi has had a long conversation with the king of England about the affairs of Florence. The King has heard all he has told him with so much interest and so much pleasure as though he were himself a Florentine. He has much praised the courage of Florence, and spoken very disparagingly of the Pope and the Emperor, showing great enmity to the one and the other. Nor is it to be wondered at; for the King had sent the father of the dame, to use the exact words of Francesco de Bardi, to speak with the Pope about the divorce, which had been positively promised, but he got such an answer that the envoy immediately returned to England. It is impossible to say how discontented 'they' are; in fact, so much that nothing else is thought of in that island every day, except of arranging affairs in such a way that they do no longer be in want of the Pope, neither for filling vacancies in the Church, nor for any other purpose. All this is treated in the letter of Francesco Bardi at great length.

"He writes, moreover, that, speaking to the King about the great hardship to which 'our poor city' is exposed, the King said that if he did not wish so much that the king of France should have back his sons, he would not mind any other thing in the world, but show favor by real deeds to 'our' just cause, and oppose such iniquitous princes as the two (Pope and Emperor) are. As soon as the sons of the king of France are delivered to their father, he will be well prepared to show his real intentions. The consul adds, that if Florence could send bonds for a sum of 40,000 or 50,000 ducats, he thinks he could get so much money, and perhaps more. Thinks that the sons of the king of France would be sooner delivered if some person were sent secretly, for if it is known that Florence has ambassadors in 'that' country (England ?), the affair will not be arranged, or at least delayed.

"Has thought it his duty to communicate to them without delay the news from Lyons and from England. If they cannot send a secret envoy from Florence, he is ready to do all in his power to procure the money in the above-mentioned manner. Begs them not to think him too presuming. * * * Begs to send him immediately an answer, especially with respect to what he has said about England.

It has been secretly affixed to the Chancery in St. Peter's and St. Petronius, and sent to Madame to be published there. Suggests that a copy should be sent to the Queen and the [Spanish] ambassador of England, and that the Emperor should write for information of the act to be sent hither, that the lawyers in Rome may have an opportunity of studying it in the event of any proceedings being taken.

Vivis Opera, VII. 208. Has often spoken at the palace to his brother, who is beloved by the King, the Queen, and the other princes of England. Has talked with him about many things, as he, like Ulysses, has visited many countries, and knows the customs and tongues of many men. He seems to love Giles more as a father than a brother, and is always eager for his advantage. Exhorts him, as a priest of Christ, to practise virtue and study the Gospel.

23 March. 4. [The EMPEROR'S PROPOSITIONS.†]

R. O. If the king of England will not contribute to the army in Italy, but would prefer to make an expedition on this side, at Boulogne or elsewhere, the Emperor will be content that he should raise an army, and employ it this spring on whatever enterprise he thinks best. The Emperor will not be bound to contribute to this, but will give the King every facility for enlisting men into the Low Countries. The Emperor promises to use all his efforts to make Bourbon stay with the army in Italy and enter France, with the aid of the complement of the 200,000 cr., and that with which his Majesty will furnish him besides; by which means the enemy may be brought to reason. The Duke must be favored and protected as both princes have promised. The Emperor will do all he can from the side of Spain, without binding himself to any particular course, for he means to promise nothing but what he is certain of accomplishing.

5. CLEMENT VII. to WOLSEY.

R. O. The bishop of Bath has requested him to confer the office of collector upon Peter Vannes. Would have been glad to comply, but for very pity cannot deprive the present holder of his only means of support, especially now when he has just been released from prison, and has suffered so much on the Pope's account. Vesp. F. XIII. 110. B. M. Received on the 27th April the King's letters to them and other commissioners of the North and West Ridings;—caused them to be proclaimed at Ripon on the 28th. Would that the people were content to hear them without murmur. Will see that they are proclaimed everywhere. Whenever the Commissioners meet, the people assemble against them, and will not listen to reason. When the spiritual officers appointed a meeting at Bedall, in Richmondshire, on the 27th, the commons, supposing that the Commissioners would meet there for the subsidy, assembled for their destruction, and would not disperse till they knew that the Commissioners were not coming. † It is probable that these propositions were brought by Jerningham on his return to England. See Contarini's letter of the 21 April 1524, in Mr. Brown's Venetian Calendar. Jerningham left on the Wednesday in Passion Week, which was the 23d March. See ibid., under 1 April. The secret letters of Charles in this volume, Nos. 175 and 176, probably refer to these proposals. No doubt this change was brought about by the successes of Bourbon during the interval.

The confession of John Luce, of the date and place aforesaid, before the said mayor and others. The said John Blake, the leader, Wm. Hall, and Davy ———†, condescended before him on 7 March last, to obtain men to join them, in order to take a Bretagne ship, lying at Cambour Point, in the liberties of Winchelsea, and with it to put to sea to capture others.

On Shrove Sunday last he was desired by Davy and Wynter to take the above ship; all the above persons, with Roger Lighterman, John Hemon, John Gylis, and Wm. Tomsett, were to assist them. Wynter told him that John Cutterd was to be one of them; and Olyver himself asked Thomas Lewys and Robt. Hunt, servants to Sir Wm. Fynche, but they refused.

The confession of Wm. Tomsett, on the said date, before Thomas Asshebournham and Walter Hendley. In Lent last, Wynter and Olyver called him out of the vicarage of Farlegh as he was at work, and asked him to join "a dosyn good felows," who were about to take a French ship lying in the Puddyll, and then sell it. "Old John Blake of Winchelsea" was to be their master. Tomsett refused to join them. They made their purpose known to the vicar of Farlegh, and one Mortymer; the latter refused like Tomsett.

nothing would more gratify Mr. Wingfield (Sir Richard) than to succeed to Lovel's place among us; not that so small a salary could be an object to so affluent and honorable a man, but simply from his regard for literary men. So earnest is he on the subject, that More, to whom we stood long ago pledged, has been prevailed upon, though only, it is said, by the King's intercession, to give way to him. He wins the goodwill of everybody by his urbanity and kindness. Greene will, therefore, see to it; the interests of the university depend upon him. Who has more influence with the King than Wingfield? Hopes he is not officious in thus writing. Wrote late at night after equinoctial rains, and well nigh knocked up with the heat of the sun and feasting.

15. DE PRAET to the VICEROY OF NAPLES.

Received yesterday his letters, dated 4th instant. Has written several times, and sent copies of his letters to the Emperor, by which the Viceroy will see the state of affairs, and that the Legate desires a truce. Sees no way of getting money here, except that the English ambassador at Rome has secret orders to deliver the 50,000 cr. if necessary. Advises him to try and get it.

Peace or truce must soon be resolved upon, or preparations made to finish the war. Much complaint is made here of the great sums spent without profit. The Emperor now owes 500,000 cr., and they perceive that it will not be paid during the war, and they have some understanding with the French king, that if he recovers the duchy of Milan, he will pay the indemnity. Cannot positively assert this, but has strong suspicions. Yesterday Scotch ambassadors arrived, and were well received.

As to the Pope's overtures for truce and a defensive league, it seems strange that his Holiness should wish the Emperor to put into his hands what he holds in Italy if the French king does not do the like.

The Imperialists are stronger in the field, and hold the chief places in the duchy of Milan, but he fears that the enemy know their want of money. Unless the Viceroy can get money, it would be better to save something by a truce. London, 20 Dec. 1524.

16. THOMAS ILDERTON, of London, to SIR JOHN DAUNCE and JOHN HAYLES, General Surveyors of Crown Lands.

R. O.

Being appointed to assist John Heron, one of the commissioners for victualling the King's army, he received at Sandwich, by command of the Council, 639 qrs. of wheat from Antony Vivalde, merchant, of Jeine, which Heron afterwards sold to the bakers of London for 12*s.* the quarter, being in all 383*l.* 8*s.* The money was received by Nic. Bolles, Heron's clerk, in his office. Vivalde says he sold the wheat for more than 360*l.*, but has never received more than 300*l.*, and now claims the residue. Advises that Vivalde and Bolles may be examined, and his own bills of receipt for the wheat in Vivalde's possession cancelled, as, if anything be due, it should be paid by Heron's executors.

R. O. 2. Petition of John Clubberd, Robt. Dobbys, John Weyman, Thos. Okeley, Thos. Freman, and the other inhabitants of Aldburgh, Suffolk.

Being ancient demesne, and within the liberties of St. Awdry, pertaining to the prior of Ely, they have enjoyed liberty of trading without customs in any part of England; but at Newcastle, whither they have gone till lately for seacoal, Thos. Horseley, then mayor, and Robt. Brendelen, then sheriff,* have charged them 12*d.* for the first shovel-full of ballast they discharged, and 3*d.* for every succeeding ton; 20*d.* for the conduct of their ships and boats; 2*d.* for every chalder of coals they bought, and 1*d.* a chalder for the imposition thereof; 12*d.* a chalder for grindstones; 12*d.* for other merchandise; and tolls for any goods they brought with them. The town is poor, and grievously impoverished by these exactions. Have 20 ships and 100 mariners ready to serve the King, and have rescued as many as 20 sail pursued by French and Scots. The beach is very suitable for an army to land, if it were not defended by the town.

ii. Answer of Robt. Brandelyng and Harry Anderson, in the name of Thos. Horseley, mayor, and the burgesses of Newcastle.

The matter of complaint could be pursued at common law, and proceeds from malice. Do not know that Aldeburgh is ancient demesne. Newcastle has always been the King's chief port and safeguard, and the following tolls have always been paid: For every ship or boat not free, 20*d.*; for every ship discharging ballast at the quay called the Ballast Shore, 12*d.*; for ballast discharged, 3*d.* a ton; for coals bought, 2*d.* a chalder, and grindstones, 3*d.*; for every ship let to freight or hire, 12*d.* These tolls the mayor and burgesses, and the burgesses before there was a mayor, have farmed from the King for 100*l.* a year; and they are their only revenue for paying the said farm, and for repairing the walls and pavements, the bridge over the main river and haven, and the ballast shore, which is of timber, 18 score feet in length, and costs 40 marks a year; the total costs being about 300*l.* a year, beside many other charges. If the customs are interrupted, the King will lose 600*l.* a year, beside the rent of 100*l.*, and by the decay of the port the north parts will lose a great safeguard. The inhabitants of Aldeburgh have always paid these tolls without grudging till lately, and they have made this surmised complaint from malice, unless there is any record in the book of Domysday that the town is ancient demesne, or such privileges have been given to the prior and his tenants, &c.

32. BEURES, LAURENS, and LA SAUCH to MARGARET OF SAVOY.

The President went today to the Cardinal to declare the contents of her letters and Silly's instructions. Said he supposed Wolsey knew of the articles given to the Emperor by the English ambassador, and his reply. He then commenced to talk of those who had been the causes of the disagreement. But the President did not wish to enter into this, and made no answer, but proceeded to speak of the proposals for peace made by the duke of Savoy. He said he was glad they saw it was not he, but others, who wished to treat with France. Replied that the proposal did not emanate from the Emperor, nor any one about him, but from the French king, as one could see from its being so advantageous to him. Showed him the contents of the Pope's letters; with which he was contented. Said that the Emperor did not wish to show any discontent with the Pope, and that he intended to send some light horse and artillery to join the 4,000 Germans and 300 men-at-arms, and to attack Narbonne, and that the Emperor desired the King to invade France where he thought best. He said he knew that the instruction contained also that Madame was to furnish 3,000 horse and 3,000 foot, for the King to lead where he pleased. Replied that there was no such clause, and, as he persisted, swore that he had not seen it. The Cardinal said that in that case they told the English ambassadors one thing, and wrote another.

He again said that Madame must do it, for both the King and the Emperor were going to attack in person, and the treaties contained it,—offering to show them to him. Replied that there was no need, for that he knew their contents, and there was nothing about furnishing any number of men, and that the number demanded was impossible. Returning to what was said the day before about Picardy, he said that the King did not wish to invade Picardy, as the towns were too strong, and that if Madame did not assist she would lose the love of the English. Replied as before, that he could have enough horse and foot for his money. He said that Madame must make an effort; that the Emperor would gain Burgundy, Languedoc, and Provence; and that he knew the means to make him Emperor, not on paper, but really with power over Italy, and holding his court at Rome. Replied that he did not think the Emperor aspired to such a monarchy, but would be content to recover his own. He then desired the President to return on the following day at 3 p.m. London, Saturday, 1 April.

Today the President found the Scotch ambassadors with the Cardinal, who said that they would leave tomorrow or the day after, without any result; that he had done a great service to the Emperor, for the Scotch had asked for the Princess in marriage for their King, then for a perpetual peace, comprehending the French king, and, finally, for a truce until St. Andrew's Day; all which he had refused, and war therefore continues. Told him he wondered at the refusal of the truce, but he said that war was better. He repeated the services of the King to the Emperor, and requested the 6,000 men. Said it was impossible; that the people would not grant money to pay them. He said that the King was determined to invade; and that if they would do nothing for him, he would do nothing for them. Replied that they would do what they could, but that this was impossible. He then proposed capitulating in general, saying that when the Emperor's captain-general was with the Emperor, they could agree to march wherever was best. Said that could not be, for then the captain-general would be obliged to go to Normandy to meet the King. He said the King would land at Calais, where the captain could meet him; and that their artillery being at Valenciennes it was better to decide then than sooner, that the enemy might know nothing of it. This grant was made by the Earl at lord Burgevenny's request, not recollecting that he had previously granted the same to a chaplain of his own for long service during the Earl's youth, for which he had not otherwise rewarded him. Wolsey's chaplain holds another benefice in the Earl's gift, worth 20*l.* a year. Nevertheless, will act as Wolsey thinks fit. Brauncepath, 3 April. Signed.

diocese of Canterbury, for the conservation of the honor of the realm, and the recovery of the realm and crown of France, with other dominions rightfully appertaining to the King.

The King's subjects know that he has been obliged to join the Emperor, Bourbon, and other princes, for the repressing of the French king's ambition. Their joint army has invaded Provence, and returned to Italy to resist the French king's invasion, where it has remained all the winter, and finally defeated the King at Pavia. The present occasion of regaining the realm of France could not be honorably passed over. If it were, France would never after respect, pay tribute or pensions to, nor live in peace with, this realm. The people must therefore do all they can for this purpose, upon which depends all the future prosperity and honor of the realm. If it is effectually set forth, it will be the last demand which the King intends to make of his people; but if not, the country can neither prosper in honor nor wealth, but will remain in continual reproach and war, to the destruction of trade. The King therefore intends personally to invade France, which has thus long been unjustly withheld from the crown of England, in the beginning of this summer; and another army will be set upon the sea, the expence of which will be too great for the King to support, unless his subjects will contribute. He has therefore commissioned the archbishop of Canterbury to practise an amicable grant by the spiritual persons of his diocese, including monasteries and other houses of religion, exempt and not exempt, collegiate churches, hospitals, chantries, parish churches, &c. First, the Archbishop shall repair to his diocese, summon before himself or his commissaries spiritual persons of all degrees, except those whose names are contained in the enclosed schedule, declare to them the above preamble, and show them that after long discussion and consultation with the nobles and clergy, it has been decided that the rate for the spiritualty must be the third part of yearly revenues of lands, benefices, salaries, or wages, or the value of moveable goods from 10*l.* upwards, and the fourth part from 10*l.* downwards. Though these sums seem great, they will not amount to as much as the first loan.

To the persons whose names are enclosed, the King has directed letters requesting the advance of certain sums; which letters the Archbishop must deliver, exhorting them to comply with his request. If any of these are not taxed to the third part of their goods, he shall assess them at that rate. It is advisable to circulate the report of the destruction of the French army in Italy, and the capture of the King, the king of Navarre, and the rest of his nobility, and to make solemn processions, fires, and other tokens of joy and comfort, a few days before assembling the clergy, that this consolation may be fresh in their memory. The shortness of time will not allow the trial and examination of the values, and therefore every person will be assessed as he was at the last loan, unless he has been newly promoted, or his salary increased. The Archbishop must take order that some part of the money may be paid at once, and the whole of the rest may be paid to the treasurer of the Chamber by Midsummer next. A certificate of the sums to be paid must be sent to Wolsey as soon as possible. If the French king recompenses the King, or if a profitable peace is made before the voyage is commenced, the King will restore to his subjects as much of the money as he can. Signed.

36. DUKE OF NORFOLK to [WOLSEY].

Since writing last, has had no small business to bring the King's commandment to good effect. The commissioners have taken great pains. They sent to the Duke 200 persons whom they could not induce to the grant, and he has so treated them that not one has refused. Does not think there are 20 in the shire from 20*l.* upwards who have not granted. Some have not appeared before the commissioners, being either absent or sick, but he is in no great doubt but that all will consent. Yesterday and tomorrow the people below 20*l.* will be practised. The grant will probably be much more than the loan was. Came hither on Sunday night. Found the mayor and inhabitants so desirous to please the King that no one has refused, except 20 or 24 persons from 20*l.* downwards, who were absent on business, and who, he doubts not, will agree as the others have done on their return. They have shed many salt tears for doubt how to find money to content the King. Advises that a letter of thanks should be sent to them. Lynn and Yarmouth cannot be cessed till Tuesday and Wednesday in Easter week, as the gentlemen appointed thereto are now sitting in other hundreds. However, six or seven of the best of Yarmouth promise that there shall be no default; and Wm. Conysby, Francis Montford, Thos. Thursby, and Thos. Gybon have made a like promise for Lynn. Has told Mr. Townesend to go there. Asks Wolsey to send a special commission for the town according to custom, with the above names, the mayor, "and a glass window to put in five or six more of his brethren." Advises the insertion of his own name, though he may not sit. Wolsey expresses surprise that 24 of the best of the shire should not exceed 14 of the city, above 500*l.* in their values; but he assures him that all in the town and shire are valued according to the books sent by Mr. Wyot and Mr. Dauncey of the first loan. No one is favored a penny. He that paid 20*l.* at the loan has granted 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, which will mount high if all the realm do the same. In the town there are more merchants above 200*l.* than gentlemen above 200 mks. Wolsey writes that it was a great error to allow the grant of Norwich to stand conditionally on other cities making a like grant; but there was no such condition made, but both they and the gentlemen after the grant desired him to intercede with the King, that if the like was not passed in other places, they might not be charged with theirs.

Desires to know the King's pleasure, whether he shall come up before St. George's Day. If he do so, he must start on the Tuesday after Easter Day, when the commissioners will sit for Lynn and Yarmouth, and two hundreds. Will not come till he hears the King's pleasure, although it is very needful for him to be in London to prepare for this great voyage. Norwich, 10 April. Signed.

Received his letters on the 17th inst.; and on the 19th, by the treasurer and comptroller of the Household, the King's letters and instructions concerning the amicable grant, which he will execute with all diligence. Letters are already sent to the sheriff of Kent to summon the commissioners to meet at Canterbury on 2 May. Afterwards they will sit at Maidstone, then at Otford, and elsewhere. Postponed the appearance of his clergy till he knows Wolsey's further pleasure how to order them. Hopes to hear from him before 2 May. Sees great difficulty in getting from the commons and spiritualty of Kent the required sums, which they say are "importable." Cannot perceive by their words but that they will be ready to do the best they can, from their love and faith to their Prince, and their respect for the costly journey and high enterprise proposed into France. In all the communication he has had with them, though he has used rough and smooth words, has never heard any one speak except reverently and honorably of the King. Wolsey himself, and others of the King's council, must take patience for a season, though fellows having but little consideration of the substance and necessity of the King's business talk of u[s] at their pleasure otherwise than becomes them. Is right sorry that the people should be so furious and lewd. Is called old fool, behind his back, for consenting to this grant. It is reported, as if in despite, that as he was the first that granted thereto, he will be a great occasion of the inconveniences that will follow therefrom. Some malicious persons say that it would be better for an old fool like him to take his beads in his hand, than to meddle in temporal business pertaining to war and general undoing of this country. But as Christ, who was called by the Jews a seducer, traitor, and worker by the Devil, bore it patiently, his children should do likewise, and not seek vengeance upon every word of displeasure. If God should punish extremely every lewd word and deed, he would, within a little while, leave but few alive. As to Wolsey, it always has been and will be that whoever is in most favor and counsel with a great prince shall be maligned, do he never so well; but whatever be spoken, the fruits which a tree brings forth will prove its goodness.

Would be as sorry to know any ill word spoken or ill deed intended against Wolsey as the dearest friend that he has, and will try and repress anything of the kind. Otford, 21 April. Signed.

The alliance between the Emperor and the King, and the contract for marriage between the Emperor and the Princess.

The last capitulation between the Archduchess and the captain of Guisnes and Sir Robert Wingfield, that if the King invades Picardy in the present season, Madame will furnish at the Emperor's expence 3,000 horse and 1,000 foot; and 100 hoys for his passage, 776 cart horses, and 692 carts, for the artillery and baggage and artillery men. She will furnish more soldiers at the King's expence. The King and the Legate have urged Beures and the other ambassadors, and the captain of Guisnes and Wingfield have likewise urged Madame to furnish 3,000 horse and 3,000 foot, but they have excused themselves, and referred to the Emperor. The Emperor, in order to remove all cause of distrust, and to take away from the French any hope of breaking the alliance, has requested the King to deliver the Princess, which he is not bound to do till she is 12 years of age. He intends to employ the dowry and 200,000 ducats in the war. If the King refuses the Princess, the Emperor will ask for the dowry for the above purpose, and 400,000 ducats without deduction. The King has sent a gentleman to explain his intentions to the ambassadors with the Emperor. Madame desires the King to secure the herring fishery to the French and Scotch, if they will do the like for the Emperor's subjects. As to the valuation of money, if the King will send a commission to Wingfield, she will do what she can. De Maretz has a letter of credence to La Sauch, who will return, and also letters of credence to the King and Wolsey. He must receive letters coming from Spain for the ambassadors in England, present letters to the King and Wolsey, visit them as much as he can, find out news, especially whether there is a truce between England and Scotland; and, if so, ask for the King's consent to a truce between Scotland and the Low Countries. He must ask La Sauch for his ciphers, and ask him if there is anything to be done about the prisoners of Artois.

Wishes the Emperor to know that John Joachim is here. Thinks he ought to say to the French ambassadors that as long as the Lady Regent, or those who have the charge of affairs in France, negotiate with others, he will not listen to any treaty. Thinks they would then revoke him, and not send another until they saw how matters were going. He came here a year ago yesterday, and the year has passed only in journeys. His coming has always been prejudicial to the Emperor, who, by the return of the Instructions to Jean de Calmont (Calvimont), councillor of the king of France, and second president of the Parliament of Bordeaux, sent to the Emperor.

75. FRANCIS I.

First, Calmont is to deliver his letters of credence, and to say that the peace between the Emperor and the King is profitable and agreeable to France. He is sent to reside at the Imperial court, and would have been sent sooner, but the King has waited for his Queen that they might send him jointly. The King has waited long for her on the Spanish frontier; and intends to wait for some time at Cognac, although his presence is required at Paris and in Burgundy. The King desires the Emperor to send her speedily, and reminds him that he has hostages; that he himself is a prince of honor, and has promptly performed what he could, as the surrender of Hesdin, &c.

The ambassador is sent so expedite the return of Bourbon's property. The principals of Burgundy are on the road, and the King hopes to manage matters well with them, which would have been difficult if the ratification had been delivered. He must congratulate the Emperor on his marriage with the princess of Portugal; show that the ratification could not be immediately delivered, in consequence of the difficulty of inducing a country which has long been under the dominion of a prince to change; and the affair must of necessity be conducted cautiously and discreetly. The chief difficulty is the insertion by the Emperor's chancellor of a clause obliging the King to obtain the consent of the Parliament, estates, and vassals of Burgundy. If they say to him that the Papal and Venetian ambassadors are at the French court, trying to hinder the performance of the treaty of Madrid, he must reply that they have come to congratulate him on his deliverance, and that they said that a universal peace would be good; but if they mentioned anything touching his honor he would not hear them. He must also remind the Emperor of the preparations made by the Turk.

Sent the King's letters to the duke of Holstein for the delivery of our ships. Had it been addressed to the king of Denmark, he would have answered it. Thus the messenger was driven to make supplication for delivery of the ships, when he was told that we should be answered when Cowpmanhavonne was given over. 17 July. 81. HENRY VIII. to LEE.

Camb. MS. 1044, f. 17.

Has seen by his communications to Wolsey, and by his last despatch from Seville, the 13th of May, the present state of affairs, and that an ambassador had been despatched to England by the Emperor. Sends the present bearer on matters of great moment. As the Turk intends shortly to enter Hungary, and Lutheranism is rapidly spreading in Germany, Henry has directed his policy accordingly, and hopes the Emperor will do the same, without any regard to his private interests, considering the friendship that exists between them. The Emperor is aware that the king of France cannot persuade his subjects to accomplish the conditions of the treaty of Madrid, and that the Italians are in great dread of the Emperor's coming into Italy with an armed force. He should therefore act with moderation. In view of these evils, Francis has made a league with Venice and the Pope, nominating England as protector, and leaving a place for the Emperor, on condition of his restoring the French king's children for a sum of money, and satisfying his debts to England. In consideration, however, of his love for the Emperor, and belief in his moderation, the King has hitherto refused the said protectorate, and he trusts that the Emperor will manifest to the world his desire for the general peace of Christendom, abandoning all hopes of receiving the Imperial Crown by force, revoking his army, and allowing the duke of Milan to enjoy the duchy, especially at the King's intercession. The King also trusts that the Emperor will acquit the debt that is due to him, and will interpose his best services between Francis and the Emperor. This course will conduce to his own stability, and remove the dangers and scandals of Christendom. Lee is to send word how the Emperor accepts these proposals, that the King may know how to act for the good of Christendom, and whether he shall accept the protectorate that is offered him. As Lee is not well acquainted with the French tongue, and the Emperor does not understand Latin, the King sends a translation of these instructions in French; and Lee is to tell the Emperor that he has ordered this to be done verbatim, for the better understanding of the Emperor. If the Emperor takes these proposals strangely, he is to "extend the circumstances thereof" according to his wisdom. If it is reported that the King has entered the league already, he is to deny it. As the contrahents intend to act immediately, the Emperor will see the necessity of a speedy reply. If he should ask Lee what he considers a sufficient recompence for redemption of the hostages, Lee shall say, as of himself, that it should be not less than 1,000,000 cr., to be paid at various dates; and that "there may be consignation made of a good part" of the debt due to England, "upon such payments as shall be agreed to be made by the French king unto the Emperor for that purpose;" in which matter Henry would act liberally. If he finds the Emperor obstinate, Lee shall warn him that the King will very unwillingly be compelled to enter the league, and oppose his designs in Italy. 93. Warham to Wolsey.

Received on 20 Oct. Wolsey's letters, dated St. Alban's, 3rd, showing that Richard Awnsham claims 100*l.* due by the Archbishop to his grandmother, Joan Tilney. The truth is, he discharged the debt by paying a benevolence for her, which had been promised by her deceased husband, an alderman of London, to Henry VII., as doctor Lupton can depose; but her son, John Tilney, pretended that he had lost Warham's bill;—which, however, was craftily obtained at the time of his death by Thomas Awnsham, the said Richard's father. If Warham were to pay it now to the said Richard, his grandfather will still stand bound for the benevolence to Henry VII.'s executors. This is a matter of 22 years old. Trusts Wolsey will not impute to him so little conscience as to stand indebted so long. The widow often asked Warham to obtain for her the King's pardon for the life and goods of Thomas Awnsham, the complainant's father, who was then beyond sea, in service with Edmund De la Pole. This the Archbishop did, and obtained for him an office in the Tower of London, after he came to England. Wolsey knows how he has conducted himself therein. He also gave John Tilney the office of apparitorship in London, for which he might have had 40*l.* from one Smyth. The complainer's grandfather would have disinherited his father for taking part with Edmund De la Pole, but for the persuasion of Warham and Sir Thomas Frowicke. Thanks Wolsey for promising to the King to see this matter well ordered on the Archbishop's behalf. Otford, 21 Oct. Signed.

94. WOLSEY to LEE.

Has written to him on the King's affairs. Has written to the Emperor to give Lee credence, as, at the last coming of Ichingham, letters had been brought to Wolsey from the Emperor, thanking him for his good mind, and asking Wolsey's advice in his present affairs. Sends a copy of the letter. He is to tell the Emperor that he hopes his (Wolsey's) acts will contradict the report that he had declined from his accustomed observance, and that he never intended to change from that loving fashion the Emperor saw in him at Bruges. If at any time, in conference with his ambassadors, Wolsey said anything that might be taken in a different sense than he meant it, the fault was only in the plainness of the advice without dissimulation. Wolsey's advice will be seen by the King's letters, of which "the whole pain in the order of penning and compass" has been Wolsey's. He begs on his knees that the Emperor will moderate his appetite and establish peace, preferring God's cause to his own. This will be his highest honor. Westminster, 21 Oct. Signed.

95. WOLSEY to [LEE].

The King has received Lee's letters, dated Granado, the 7th, and others of September, with an answer in French from the Emperor to the King's last, by the hands of Osborn Ichingham. The King has also seen Lee's letters to Wolsey. In the packet was a letter for Mendoza, who has not yet arrived, being detained in France, although the King has written for his delivery. He has ordered a packet to be sent to the provost of Cassalys, residing here as ambassador for the lady Margaret. The provost has sent a letter of the Emperor's, thanking the King for his message, professing his amity, his desire for peace, arrangement with Francis, withdrawal of his army from Italy, and payment of the King's debts. The King and Wolsey have also seen copies of a brief sent from the Pope to the Emperor, his answer, and the offers made by Francis to the viceroy of Naples for the recovery of his children, the importance of which induces him to send this messenger. First, he is to thank the Emperor for his kind professions, in which the King will not fail to support him, from his desire for peace and resisting the Turk, who has defeated the king of Hungary; especially as, unless the Turk be resisted by Christian princes, of whom the Emperor is the chief, he will overrun Christendom, and the Faith will be destroyed. The most speedy conclusion is indispensable before the Turks penetrate into Germany. He is thankful, therefore, that the Emperor will accept his mediation. Lee is to urge him to make good his professions by deeds, and moderate his demands, as doubtless the French king will make the utmost concessions. Is to urge that a diet is impossible, in consequence of the winter and other causes, and the King's mediation will be sufficient, for he has written to Francis, the Pope, and the Venetians to send their instructions to England, and he begs the Emperor will do the same, considering the urgency of the case. Is to commend the Emperor for his offer to lay down his arms in Italy if the confederates will do the same; which they decline, as they see that he increases his armies, and has sent the viceroy of Naples with a great power, and keeps the duke of Milan out of possession.

The King is advertised of the heinous attempts of Moncada and the Colonnese against the Pope, to which he trusts the Emperor gave no consent. If the circumstances were as reported to the King, "there hath not been by the Vandals, Goths, or any other most cruel persons, so great a thing attempted; which is much the more to be detested, for that, as it is said, they spared not from despoiling of the church of St. Peter, and of other temples." His Grace and I have done all we can to excuse this deed, considering it impossible. If reasonable conformity be used on all sides, the King trusts that an accommodation will be possible. If this be done, the Emperor may proceed to take the crown Imperial without suspicion. When the King has heard Mendosa's charge touching his debts, the Emperor will find him conformable to reason. Tit.B.VII. 280. B. M.

"Rme ac Illme D. etc."

On visiting the King and your Lordship, I found you, as I had expected, anxious to promote the service of God, peace in Christendom, and an expedition for the recovery of the Holy Sepulchre, considering that the power of the Turk is increasing so rapidly that it may be impossible to resist it. This is evident from the case of the Sophy, who once could resist the Turk alone, but now is of no account; and by his conquests in Syria, Egypt, Belgrade, Rhodes, and Hungary, which have been taken within the last ten years (quo nuper abhinc decemnio ab ipso Turco capta fuerunt). These scourges for the correction of our sins have hitherto moved no one, but Christians still thirst for each other's blood, and there seems nothing to prevent universal ruin. I have, however, great hopes that by the King's aid Christendom may be united, and the banner of Christ raised again after its long burial. Your Lordship, with great kindness, has allowed me several interviews, though a man of unpolished mind and no experience; and I consider your Lordship worthy to rule the world, with God's aid, and restore and reform the Apostolic See, seeing that you have given us such wise and kind advice. The Great Master is about to return to his convent, with your favor and advice, and to send me to Spain, Portugal, and the Pope, and, if necessary, to the East, that I may keep up to their duty the men in whose hands I left the holy work. Since your Lordship declared to me, though the least of the knights of Jerusalem, the King's and your desire of making peace and attacking the Infidels, my desire to serve you makes me request you, before I leave, to enrol me in the number of your servants, and to offer my servants (famulitium) to the King if he prepares an army, and to obtain permission from the Great Master to return when sent for. Though least in experience and talent, I will yield to no one in good will and courage. When in the East I will have regard to the King's interests; and if our enterprise is successful, it will be a foundation for greater attempts. There are many nobles, religious men, and knights of Jerusalem, skilled in the affairs of the East, who, in return for your benefits, will serve you to the glory of God, the honor and profit of Christendom, and your own immortal fame, "sibique universus gratulabitur orbis captivorum et patriæ liberatori."

103. EDWARD FETYPLACE to CROMWELL.

Has received his letter reproaching him with having broken his promise about certain arrears of 10*l.*, other 10*l.* for the parsonage of Chadellworth, and 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for the site of the late monastery of Poffeley. Reminds him of his promise at the suppression of that house, and also at Donyngton, about the parsonage and the lease and closes of the monastery. on the faith of which promise Fetyplace paid him 40*s.*, though Cromwell has since granted the lease to another man. Was ready to have paid Cromwell his duty several times, both by his servant and by Mr. Smythe, "your auditor." The rents were not due at Michaelmas as Cromwell alleges:—his 10*l.* arrears being paid, they will only be due at Lady Day. It is not yet two years complete since the suppression of the monastery.* Fetyplace bought of Cromwell certain implements belonging to the house, of which he left there the well-bucket and rope, and a brass pan set in the wall to brew with, "which said implements the scholars of Cardinal College have perused and worn in the time of their lying there," but the bursar refuses to pay for them. Wonders John Iden has not called on him for the rent of Poffeley since Mich. last. The parson is willing to pay the rent of the parsonage when due. John Yong must pay five nobles for last Mich. quarter for his part of the demesnes. As for the five nobles for his own share, Fetyplace's servant will arrange with Cromwell at London next week. 104. [TURENNE] to [FRANCIS I.]†

MS. 20,994, f. 202. Bibl. Nat.

Gives an account, mutilated at the beginning, of a conference with [Wolsey] about the alternative of Francis giving 2,000,000 cr. to the Emperor, and marrying Madame Eleanor, or taking the princess Mary. Wolsey has been raising new difficulties since he learned that the Pope had agreed with the Emperor, and he wants to make us go through the eye of a needle, and will do so in the end.

When things are concluded, the King has determined to cross the sea, soon after Easter, and arrange with Francis the mode in which they shall make war. I must say we have to do with the most rascally beggar (un plus mauvais paillart) in the world, and the most devoted to his master's interests. I have only had two ciphers from you since I arrived in this country. Five or six days ago, Wolsey had agreed with us that as the Princess was not to be delivered till she was fourteen, and she is not yet twelve, to satisfy Francis, he would make an alternative marriage of Francis and the duke of Orleans, and that it should be at the King's option meanwhile to take her for himself or for his son, with various other conditions as to the delivery of the children, &c.

We replied that we had no power to treat of this; and after some further conversation he arranged that we should go on Thursday and present your letters to the King, and that on Friday we should confer with him and some notable personages about the said marriage and the peace, and that it would be advisable to conclude as soon as possible, else the ambassadors of the Pope and [Venetians], and even of the Emperor, might have some expectation that this marriage would fall through.

* Poghley was suppressed 14 Feb. 1525. See No. 1137.

† In some passages Francis is spoken of in the third person, elsewhere he is addressed "Sire."

1527.

De Vaulx, who has been long here, and who understands the Cardinal thoroughly, recommends that you should write a letter in your own hand to the king of England, and one to Wolsey, expressing again the great desire you have for this marriage, and hoping that they will not press you to accept dishonorable conditions.

105. TURENNE [and the BISHOP OF TARBES] to FRANCIS I.

Arrived in this town on Saturday last. Should have been here the day before, but for the Cardinal's orders, as the lords whom the King was going to send to receive us had not arrived. We were honorably received by two bishops, two knights of the Garter, and other great persons.

Yesterday we were received by the Cardinal, also with great honor, especially considering his behavior to other ambassadors. The bishop of Tarbes made him a Latin speech, to thank him for the advice he had given his master during your captivity, and to say that you considered that you owed your liberty to the King and him.

After presenting our letters, he took us into his chamber alone, where we declared our charge, thanking him for the overtures made by the bishop of Bath and —— concerning your marriage with the princess of England, and the strict alliance of the two Kings against the Emperor for the recovery of the French king's children, assuring him how much Francis desired the marriage, for which, and for the league, we had power to conclude. Wolsey thanked Francis for the confidence he reposed in him, and said he had conferred about the marriage with De Vaux several times, to bring his master to it, "qui estoit au commansement de Boulogne ou cite de Guines." Wolsey also spoke to us about the propositions that had been made by Fitzwilliam for a payment of salt, and of 50,000 cr. to England; but they replied that they had no commission except to conclude the marriage and the offensive league, and deprecated the terms proposed, as unreasonable.

106. TURENNE to MONSIEUR [MONTMORENCY].

You may be sure we have to deal with a man as difficult to manage as can be, as you will see by what my fellows and I write to the King. Notwithstanding that he had agreed to the articles sent to Francis, and been shown our powers to conclude, he has found fault with them, and insisted on having others in a form which will be sent to you in two or three days. Thinks that the bargain made by the Pope with the Emperor has caused him to augment a certain article to his advantage, which he had already agreed upon with De Tarbes. The latter was with him yesterday very late, and they spoke both . . . . . .† for there was no witness, except De Vaux, that he had used any other language than he had held with us that morning. The dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk told me yesterday that the King their master was very desirous to see Francis, and said it was only owing to him that he did not immediately cross the sea, and arrange the form of the attack upon the Emperor, in case he would not come to honorable terms. They said nothing could exceed Henry's love for Francis, and nothing could break their friendship. I replied with similar assurances, and said that it was shown on the part of Francis by his agreeing to the articles demanded by the Cardinal, which were such that he would never otherwise have consented to. If Francis approve of the interview, thinks it will be easily brought about.

107. TURENNE to [MONTMORENCY].

You will understand by the King's letters the difficulties Wolsey daily creates, so that I cannot feel assured of anything he says until the treaty be sworn and passed. Believes this is owing to the bargain made between the Pope and the Emperor. The treaty being passed, the king of England wishes to send an ambassador to the Emperor along with one sent by Francis, and Wolsey proposes that De Tarbe be sent. London, 7 April.

108. TURENNE to MONTMORENCY.

Since he wrote, the king of England sent for the ambassadors to show them the ceremonies of his Order, which were most honorable. He said he had news from Rome that the Pope had not only consented to a suspension of arms, but had paid 60,000 cr. for Bourbon's army, of which he had not yet disbursed more than 30,000; the rest Jacomo Salviati was to deliver for the Florentines; and the Pope pretends that it was for the ransom of two prisoners, one of whom is his nephew. This way of putting it is in order not to displease the King and Francis. The Datary was on the point of departure for England to excuse his master for what he had done; and Henry said it was necessary to keep the Pope firm, or friar Nycomede and others would get him to go to Spain, as Bourbon, notwithstanding the suspension of arms, was marching straight upon Florence. Henry is determined to send an ambassador to dissuade him from this, and to urge him to a new league with him and Francis. He expresses himself anxious to speak with Francis, when he could tell him things that no other could tell him. Tarbes* replied that it would take a long time, and that it would be better meanwhile to inform Francis of his intentions by some confidential person like Wolsey. He agreed that it would be better the Cardinal should go first, and that afterwards he himself would go and speak with Francis. He recommends Francis to have a troop of Germans, and would prefer lance-knights to Swiss. Finds him very well inclined to the success of Francis. London, 24 April 1527.

3 Aug. 113. JOHN RUT to HENRY VIII.

Purchas' Pilgrimes, III. 809. All the company are in good health. The Mary of Gilford, with all her [crew, are safe,] thanks be to God. Went northward till we came to 53°, where we found many islands of ice, and dared not go further. Went southward, and in four days came into 52°, and fell in with the main land, within ten leagues of which was a great island of ice. Landed at Cape de Bas, a good harbour, with many small islands, and a great fresh river. The land is wilderness, mountains and woods, and no people. We found the tracks of divers great beasts, but saw none of them. Have not seen the Samson since a great storm on July 1. Had arranged to meet at the Cape de Sper, where the ship that arrived first should wait six weeks. Stayed at Cape de Bas ten days, and then sailed southward. On 3 Aug. entered the haven of St. John, where were eleven sail of Normans and one Breton, and two Portugal barks, all fishing. We are now ready to go towards Cape de Bas, which is 25 leagues, till we meet our fellow, and then whither we were commanded at our departing. The haven of St. John, 3 Aug. 1527.

A memorandum was endorsed on the original, that Master Grubes' two ships left Plymouth 10 June, and arrived at Cape de Bas 21 July, which was the first land they saw after leaving Selle.

Francis may, therefore, take what road he thinks fit. We lose as little time as possible, and are together night and morning.

Has postponed on this account his intention to go hunting in Byere, and to see his building which he has begun there. Awaits the return of Villandry every hour, from whose despatch he has every hope of obtaining the deliverance of his children.

Owing to the want of horses and the badness of the roads between Canterbury and London, could only arrive here a little before night. Had, therefore, postponed till tomorrow going to Wolsey, but at 9 o'clock Wolsey sent me by his Italian secretary (Vannes) the despatch which you will see. The secretary tells me he is writing to the ambassadors in Spain, in accordance with your desire, as to the intimation of war, notwithstanding the new offers, and the return of one of them, in case the Emperor refuse the last proposals.

When I see him, therefore, I shall not extend my credence so far, nor to the letters of Francis and Madame, which have been all sent me by this packet. As they thought that I was still with you, and as they only brought the said packet that my servants might see if there was anything in it for me, I have opened it and shut it up again clumsily, as well as time would allow. This was shown to you the day the Order (of the Garter) was delivered.

It was added that the acceptance or refusal of these offers would depend (estaient remises) upon what was heard of the succours of the Archduke. I said that before an answer was given, l'Esleu Bayard would have arrived, and the final overtures would have been proposed by all the ambassadors, which might cut short the Emperor's words. 125. DU BELLAY to FRANCIS I.

Wrote to the Grand Master on the 19th, by a chaplain of Wolsey's whom Montmorency knows, telling him what Wolsey said he had heard, by information, of Pointz coming from Spain. Has nothing more to report, except that a Scotchman who was at the court when you were at Amiens, and was passing this way to go to Scotland, had made a report to the duke of Norfolk about something Wolsey had said to you regarding him. He is now returned here, and has been put in the Tower of London. Being questioned, he made a confession, which I send you in writing; in which, finding mention made of my brother, I have taken some trouble to find out about him. I find that he had been long an agent of the archbishop of St. Andrew's and others at Rome, when my brother, having returned, as you know, a little before the capture of the city, and having promised to obtain for the Pope 20,000 cr. if he would not agree with the Viceroy, procured from this Scotchman a loan, of which he returned to him 600 or 700 cr. on finding that the Pope was not to be relied on. After the capture of Rome, this Scotchman came to Amiens to get the remainder back again, which my brother paid him. Wolsey related to me on Tuesday the whole story of his confession. Being asked from whom he had heard what he stated, as he said they were great personages, he refused to commit himself further, merely saying they were many persons about the court. Wolsey said he would send the man to you, as he had offended you more than any other by bringing this charge against one of your servants. I said I thought you would be satisfied if he himself punished him. But he remained firm in his purpose, and said he would send him to me to put him in the hands of a Scotch gentleman, who was captain of the "requeste" of Milan. I do not know if the Legate will continue in this intention, but I wait his orders. On Wednesday a courier arrived who had left Parma on the 9th, and said that De Vaudemont had brought into the field 8,000 lanceknights, which has greatly quashed the rumor got up by the Spaniards of a reinforcement of the enemy.

He was despatched near Perugia by the king of England's secretary, who had been sent long ago to go to Rome, but had not been able to proceed further. He says the news of the defeat of the Waywode is untrue. 22 Nov.

126. DU BELLAY to FRANCIS I.

Since I wrote, Wolsey sent to me, by one of his secretaries, the Scotchman of whom I have written above, with a message that I might do what I thought fit. I replied that I thought he himself should punish him according to his merits, and declined to take the charge of doing so, unless my Lord gave me special authority. I found the secretary rather cold in his first intention of sending him to you. This morning, as I was going to the King, he sent to me, desiring me to wait for an answer till the evening. Nevertheless I have endeavored by all means to learn from the Scotchman from whom he heard this; but he says he will not name any one, even if he were to die two deaths, but, being at the said meetings, both of Frenchmen and Englishmen, he understood those matters sufficiently, and that he had never told the duke of Norfolk the half of what they had charged him with, as he had declared to the Duke himself in presence of the Cardinal. Any further information about this he will send by the captain De la Rocquette. The bearer, Castillon, will tell you of another conversation (propos), which I had rather not write. He disavows what he had said about very great personages in his confession, but after I had told him several times that I had read it myself, he said that he did not know he had stated so, he was under such constraint.

24 Nov. 127. Du Bellay to Montmorency.

Colbert MS. 468, f. 737. Bibl. Nat.

Has written twice since he thought Castillon was ready to depart, once to solicit the despatch of the corn, and the second time by the doctor, "qui dict les heures avec Mons. le Legat," who has been despatched, as he told me, secretly, on the affairs of his master; with whom, though I have struck up a friendship, I have refrained, according to your admonition, from communicating too freely. You must not wonder, therefore, if things pass before my eyes, such as the despatch of ambassadors and so forth, of which I am not informed. There is no such danger of creating suspicion at Rome or Venice, so that your ambassadors there may appear more diligent than I am. Sends certain ciphers. Has thought over and over again of what he told Montmorency, when walking with him in the room, about Albany. There is some mystery in the matter, and care must be taken not to spoil anything. Complains of want of couriers. Is asked whether he has not received letters by the English courier who arrived on Wednesday; and they are astonished to hear that he has not. As soon as any good news comes, they are very glad to spread it abroad among the people, who assuredly do not easily get angry at our enemies, especially since their intercourse has been broken off (depuis la retraicte de leur traicte). Understands the King is ill pleased with them on this account, and you may be sure that Spaniards and Flemings are not slow to propagate false reports. You know that is of more consequence here than at Paris. Gentlemen from the court still occasionally get themselves conveyed to this church; still expecting to find you in your lodging, they come and see me in this place. They lose a little by the change. I expect that on the arrival of this gentleman, there will be great curiosity to enquire the news of you. But in case you have not received my letters by the Doctor, the principal subject of them was, that it was known the Emperor would condescend to pardon the duke of Bar at the request of England;—also, by the conversations held by L'Alemand with Poinctz, that he founded himself entirely upon the succours of Ferdinand, of which, if he were disappointed, he was ready to accept your offers. For this reason Wolsey wishes Lautrec to be urged vigorously on. It is said 24,000 cr. have been despatched from Flanders to Ferdinand for the lanceknights. Even if that be true, I think it will take a long time to set their men forwards, and that meanwhile much could be done in Italy, and even in Spain. I write at length to Francis of a Scotchman who had reported words about the duke of Norfolk and Wolsey. Castillon has seen a part of them, and will report to you of everything. London, 24 Nov.

Has had much trouble these six days in looking after Montmorency's plate, and, after all, that of Francis only is finished. The copy of the treaty of the Merchants will be done tomorrow.

ago. Though he showed himself satisfied with what had been done, and wished to leave the rest to me, I refused, the more so because I feared he wished to try whether I would favor the man, either on account of his nation, or of what he said he had seen at Rome.

I said, perhaps it would be an excellent punishment for him to be sent to France, especially as Albany was at the court, who was the enemy of his master, Angus. I asked him if he would not write to you about it, but he said it would be enough for him to send him to you. He then began talking about the corn. The necessity here is very great.

Yesterday a band of people went two leagues out of the town to plunder those bringing bread to the market, and another broke open the shops, so that I was obliged to send men to defend what I had at the baker's. The people said they would take Frenchmen's bread first, as they had betrayed them.

129. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Refers him to the King's letters, which are perhaps too long, because Wolsey wished to see what he wrote of his conversation.

Has not changed a word, as it gave him complete satisfaction. He gave me two articles, which you will see, to copy. When he talked about Spain, and the suspicion given to the ambassadors of the allies, he restrained himself greatly, saying that he was long ago informed of the good service done there by the bishop of Tarbes, who, by imagining himself very subtle, has put things in great danger. Replied to this, that perhaps the ambassadors took suspicion too easily; but avoided saying anything that might irritate him, and regretted that when affairs were in good train, they should be spoiled by the mistakes of servants. He then began to read, notwithstanding all my excuses, a great paper of grievances raised by the bishop of Worcester against De Tarbe, saying it was he who put forward the overture of Milan to Bouclans and Don Juan . . . . . who laughed at him, and that he had shown that Sforza being so disabled (accidenté), and not likely to live, it would be well to find a successor for him,—with a number of other things, of which the Imperialists have taken advantage.

Advises that a packet in cipher from Wolsey, enclosed in a larger packet for the ambassador of the duke of Bari, should not be delivered, unless it can be deciphered. Thinks Mons. De la Bourdaisiere could do it. London, 14 Dec.

130. The BISHOP OF BAYONNE to FRANCIS I.

Was with Wolsey on Saturday at Mour, to communicate to him what Francis wrote on the 3rd; and early on Sunday morning, although the Cardinal was unwell, and was advised not to leave his bed all day, yet, out of his affection for Francis, he got up, and made Du Bellay read his despatches, then sent him to dine and to be treated like himself; nevertheless he considered all that Du Bellay had shown him, and recounted everything to him after dinner, thanking Francis for his confidence, and showing himself as warmly interested in his behalf as when the Grand Master was here.

Considering that the terms held towards De Tarbes and Calvimont at the time of this despatch from Spain were much more moderate than before, Wolsey was very hopeful for the future. He had no doubt that when l'Esleu Bayard had arrived, an honorable peace could be made. Bouclans said to Poinctz at his departure, that the Emperor would not be ungrateful to the king of England, and that he would do a great deal for him, saying even that it was apparent that he would show mercy to Sforza at Henry's request; and since the arrival of Poinctz, Wolsey has heard this from his own mouth. Wolsey thinks that the news received by Francis from Spain touching the reciprocal marriages, and the limitation of the duchy of Milan for life to Sforza, are entirely the inventions of the Imperialists, like so many others; for, as to the marriages, his object would be to sow suspicion between Francis and the king of England, or at least to cool their friendship. But Wolsey says his efforts will assuredly be ineffectual. Even if the marriages were more suitable in point of age, he considers it would be impolitic to listen to the proposition, seeing that it is the Emperor's object to weaken the other powers of Christendom; and it is certain, that hereafter, when peace is concluded, Francis' children restored, and the Emperor seeming as if he would subdue the world, there would still be found some one who would not bow the head to him, trusting in the support of Francis. But if it were seen that Francis had fortified himself by so many alliances, every one would lose hope of contesting the point with the common enemy. Francis would lose friends, and would only pass out of one servitude into another, and lose every means of recovering himself. You ought not, therefore, to consent to the marriage of Madame Leonore, but prefer that of the Princess.

As to the duchy of Milan and this proposal about Monseigneur d'Angoulême, Wolsey believes this stream to flow from the same fountain of Lautrec, both for the purpose of prolonging your affairs, and for getting you to commit yourself to some expression by which the Emperor may profit.

As to the alternative of getting the Duchy given to Sforza for life or for ever, although Wolsey would prefer the latter, still he would rather have the former than leave it at the disposal of the Emperor; for it would be a great object, even for the time, to deprive the Emperor of his hopes in Italy (la commodité d'Italie); after which, when you have recovered your children and got your affairs in better order, time may bring some other opportunity. If they make any overtures as to what should be done on the death of Sforza, your ambassadors can refer this point to be settled, after the conclusion of the peace, by the Princes themselves, who will settle more in an hour than at present could be done in a year. However, Wolsey thinks discussion of these matters unnecessary, if you do not mean to send a new despatch into Spain; for it appears the Emperor is already making himself more tractable, and at this moment things must be so advanced that a conclusion cannot but be arrived at before the arrival of the courier whom you would despatch; and if your ambassadors have any skill, they will not have been compelled to comply with the last offers. Wolsey has no doubt that Bayard has left well instructed; and if he had not been, that which he carries in writing cannot fail to be sufficient instruction for him. Nevertheless, great diligence must be used. Wolsey has considered what Francis has sent about Italy, and is very glad matters are in the state they are concerning the duke of Ferrara, whose friendship he cannot esteem too highly, and on whose account he advises that the matter of the marquis of Mantua should be followed up, so as to close up every entry to Italy against the Emperor. He is greatly disappointed, however, at Lautrec's delay, as it was a case where the loss of one day was as serious as that of a year at another time. He thinks the dissimulation of some of the confederates has been owing to that delay, and may cause the ruin of everything, as it tends to increase the suspicion of Francis' treaties with the Emperor.

He thinks this one reason why the Cardinals have not made the contribution which they were bound to make, as he knows by their own letters [they would have done so], if Lautrec had marched forward. As to the succours of your lanceknights, he thinks they ought not to have been waited for, because Lautrec, and the reinforcements with the marquis of Saluce, are far more powerful than the enemy, and are in such esteem that if he had marched quickly on, the enemy would have sent to treat with him. It is said here that Lautrec is so destitute of troops that he dare not go on, and that if he have any, he is temporizing in expectation of a treaty; which is the most dangerous reputation he can have. It is true the Pope did not send to him, but it may be supposed that he was so closely hemmed in by his enemies that he was unable to despatch a messenger. For these reasons Wolsey strongly advises that Lautrec should be ordered to set forward with all diligence to make up for lost time; and he hopes Francis' fleet will be able to do something at Naples. On Friday he despatched a courier, in compliance with the wishes of Francis and Madame, to urge the Pope, by means of Casale, Gambara, and Knight, not to forget any means of getting free from the hands of the Emperor, in whom he must by no means trust, but endeavor to escape either towards Lautrec or to some safe stronghold. Wolsey also had information that on the 3rd ult. Ferdinand was crowned king of Hungary, and his Queen the day following; but as there was news of a great descent of the Turk, he was going to Ramspourch (Ratisbon), where a diet was held of all the princes of Germany; and that, if the state of matters will admit of it, he will afterwards descend upon Italy; if not, he will send thither a great aid. But Wolsey thinks the affairs of Hungary will occupy him quite enough. Has heard himself of a great battle between Ferdinand and the Waywode in October, in which, although some of the troops of the latter were insubordinate, there was great loss on both sides; that the Waywode had retired into Transylvania, awaiting troops from Poland, and that Ferdinand had not been able to obtain the crown of St. Stephen for his coronation, as it was kept in a small town held by the Waywode.

On Sunday, Wolsey, having held all this discourse with me, told me I should return next day with the minute of the letters I was writing to you. This I did; and, having read them twice, he approved of them, then delivered them to me to add two articles, one taken from the letter of Casale, the other from those of Mons. de Vuyenne (qu. bishop of Worcester ?), that by the first you may see the news from Italy, and by the other that you may know "la fantaisie qu'il luy print soudain, que luy leuz vos lettres de traines de l'Empereur n'avoir esté mauvaises;" repeating still more warmly the assurances and advice of the day preceding.

On returning yesterday lord Lisle came to see me, excusing himself for not having more frequently visited me, and related at great length many conversations which you and Madame had held with him, the greater part of which he had reported to the King and Cardinal; and you may be sure that what you have said about the Cardinal has done much to confirm him in his good will. The ambassadors of Venice, Ferrara, and Milan have also been with me frequently, and have not been able to avoid expressing their suspicions, from what they have heard from Spain, as the Grand Master and others may have seen. They fear much the Pope's deliverance will put things back where they were. Hears that the king of Portugal has sold the Spiceries at the miserable price of 300,000 cr.

When the King was at Hampton Court did not speak to Wolsey to communicate to him what you sent me, but always waited to see what he would say. At my departure he requested me to leave all my papers, which he would send to the King.

131. Montmorency to the Bishop of Bayonne.

Has received his letter of the 15th inst. Thanks him for his cordiality. Has read it word for word to Francis and "Madame vostre bonne mere," who have been delighted with the contents, and have bid me express their thanks for your loyal affection, and beg you to continue, as they wish above all things to have your advice. Would be glad of occasional directions himself as to what Du Bellay thinks advisable, and he may be sure Montmorency will use such efforts to preserve the amity as he would to obtain Paradise. As to Lautrec's delay at Parma, it has not been without cause, nor without the Pope's concurrence, as Du Bellay may see by the brief Lautrec lately received from his Holiness, which was sent by command of Francis to the bishop of Bayonne and De Brosse, to communicate to the king of England. During the Pope's imprisonment, Lautrec had feigned to make an earlier advance than he did. The final determination of the enemy was, in order to keep the Pope's person with less expence, to bring him "des dites gayettes" (qu. to Gaeta ?), and if that had taken place his deliverance would not have followed so soon. This the Pope himself acknowledges, and considers that he owes his liberty to the two Kings, and to the fear in which the enemy stood of Lautrec's army. Lautrec will certainly not lose time, as he has lately written to Francis, and will wait for nothing but an answer to the message sent to his Holiness by Paul Camille de Trevolse and Gregory Casale, for it is necessary that he should be governed by the Pope's opinion, especially now that he is at liberty. Care has been taken that Lautrec shall not be in want of money.

Lautrec has lately intimated to Francis that the Pope is about to despatch Gambara to him, with instructions to go on to England. Has heard nothing from Spain since the arrival of l'Esleu Bayard. St. Germain-en-Laye, 31 Dec. 1527.

Can add little to the King's letters, except to beg him to despatch this courier immediately. Has no doubt he has received his despatch of the —— ult. in cipher, in which he gave him assurance of the things of which he was in doubt. It has been necessary for De Brosse to remain during this procuration. He has acquitted himself so well that the King and Wolsey have desired to retain him. When any one goes hence, you will please to consider what Francis shall give the herald and other officers of the Order, for they ought to have presents at this installation. Does not write on his own behalf, knowing by letters of La Pommeraye that Montmorency has done more for him than he would have dared to ask. But if they do not provide promptly for this matter about the Order, and if he have to borrow, knows well he will wait long to have news of it again. Has spent since Montmorency's departure more than 1,000 cr., with the utmost possible economy. It is a great trouble to have to do with poor folks. London, 2 Jan.

3 Jan. 136. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

MS. 5,499, f. 158. Bibl. Nat.

Has received his long letter of the 31st ult. Thanks the Cardinal for his friendly counsel about the news from Spain and the enterprise in Italy. As to the reciprocal marriages proposed to his ambassadors in Spain, sees so great force in the Cardinal's opinion, that, even if he were at all inclined to them, Wolsey's arguments so completely dissuade him from it, that he will hold out no encouragement to the Imperialists. Is firmly determined not to make any closer alliance with the Emperor than that for which their ambassadors have received powers for the delivery of his children. Holds his alliance with England indissoluble. The ages of the parties will be a convenient excuse for refusing the proposed marriages, of which he has no doubt his ambassadors have already availed themselves. As to Milan, his ambassadors will need to have regard to Wolsey's advice. L'Esleu Bayard has gone so well instructed in that and other things that Francis trusts there will be no mistake. Is much of Wolsey's opinion about the enterprise of Italy, that, notwithstanding the Pope's liberation, it should be pushed forward more vigorously than ever. Has written to Lautrec accordingly by express courier, and has despatched today one of his valets-de-chambre to press him still further; which he is sure he will do, notwithstanding any treaty made by the Pope and the Imperialists. Has no doubt the Pope will avenge himself, by the army of Francis, for the injuries done to the Holy See.

Since writing his other letters, Francis has received a post from Lautrec, announcing the arrival of Gambara, who is coming hither to go on to England, taking with him the treaties between the Pope and the Imperialists, which Francis is anxious to send to his ambassadors in Spain as soon as possible, to inform them of the Pope's liberation. Is desired meanwhile to send him another copy (double), which he can show to the King and Wolsey, that they may see the dishonorable demands to which the Imperialists have forced his Holiness to submit. Is to request them to do the like to their ambassadors in Spain, as Francis intends to do to his, so that by good means copies may be sent to the grandees of Spain, that they may see what has taken place; for, unquestionably, the Emperor will publish quite another version of the story. Has spoken to Francis about the son of lord Lisle's servant, who shot a Fleming at Rochelle, and Francis has pardoned him very willingly.

Assures him that if all the English had killed all the Flemings in like fashion, they would not have much difficulty in getting their pardons. St. Germain, 5 Jan.

9 Jan. 140. The BISHOP OF BAYONNE and DE BROSSE to FRANCIS I.

MS. 5,499, p. 41. Bibl. Nat.

On Sunday last were with the Legate at St. Paul's, in the company of all the ambassadors, who were summoned to attend. A procession was made, and solemn service performed by the bishop of London, at which a great number of prelates assisted, in honor of the Pope's deliverance. Next day, which was Twelfth Day, we were all at his lodging, where again a procession and honorable service was held, followed by a triumphal banquet, and farces played in Latin, in which the praises of the two Kings were not forgotten, nor Wolsey's either, in relation to the Pope's deliverance, and the hope of peace. After the Imperial ambassador had left, Wolsey desired those of the confederates not only to persevere in their good intentions, but even to increase their efforts. Among others, he addressed to the Venetian ambassador many remonstrances about what had occurred to Lautrec, and the little trouble that the Signory had taken in the matter; to which the ambassador replied that the Signory had done better than he supposed. Every one departed in good humour with Wolsey, especially Du Bellay, with whom he spoke at great length of the determination of Henry and himself to bring the Emperor to reason.

This day and the day preceding he gave the chief place to the Imperial ambassador, which I yielded to readily, as it came from him, though I remember it was said of the late Mons. de la Bastie that he never would go where he was compelled to accept such a position, and that he had received command to that effect from you.

Since he came our ambassadors have altered their conduct towards those of England, which Francis wishes to intimate to Henry and Wolsey, hoping that the past error will be redressed. Francis and Madame are much pleased with the great efforts made by Mons. de Bigonone (Wigorn., i. e. bishop of Worcester ?) for the recovery of his children. Hopes shortly to have an answer to Bayard's commission. Francis has despatched Mons. de Longueval, his maitre d'hôtel, to the Pope, to congratulate him on his deliverance. He is in good health, and proposes in a few days to make a sally, and come and see me in Chantilly.

I have already written that the Pope is about to send hither Gambara to go to England. According to Castillon, who has just come thence, he may speak rather coldly. Sends news by the seigneur Latin, who has long been a devoted servant of Francis, and is going on to the Pope and Cardinals. Received his packet on Friday, and sent it on to Wolsey, who has been incredibly delighted with the letters of Francis and Montmorency. On Saturday Du Bellay and De Brosse had an audience of him. Yesterday he was with the King, and today he has just sent for Du Bellay. Will write at length after his interview. De Brosse will not accompany him to Wolsey, because his leg is re-opened. 143. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

You will see by the King's letters why it is that we have not made an earlier answer to your last of the 5th. Those of the 9th only arrived yesterday. De Brosse's leg has broken out again, and Du Bellay's catarrh has been very troublesome for six weeks. Whatever ground he gains in eight days, he loses in one, when he is forced to leave his room. Has plenty of fellow-sufferers, for great part of London is suffering from it. If he had not brought a physician from France, at this hour his benefices [would have been vacant], because the English do not understand medicine. Has often wished, if it had cost him his breviary, that Francis and Montmorency had written such letters as the two last. You cannot conceive what satisfaction they have given the King and Wolsey. Can say nothing more about the procuration for merchandise, he has written so frequently without having an answer. Reports a conversation with Wolsey about Gambara, and about sending Sir Gregory Casale to the duke of Ferrara. Wolsey is not satisfied with the capitulation of Ferrara, each of the allies being bound to support the Duke in what he has acquired, and thinks that the matter should be looked to without consulting the Duke. He also thinks we should be cautious, in dealing with the Florentines, not to alienate the Pope. As to the apprehended coolness of Gambara, he says he will warm him up. Recommends negociations with Nicholas, a Florentine merchant, who promises to get munitions of war out of Flanders in case of need. Sends a letter of Staphyleus, who may have been at Paris at the time Du Bellay received it. Thinks Staphyleus and the count de Carpi have but one will. De Brosse and I have used every endeavor to get Wolsey to approve this appointment with Ferrara, but to no purpose.

Has intelligence that the Waywode is assembling a large army to recover what he has lost, and that Ferdinand has much difficulty in opposing him. We have received the procuration for De Brosse.

144. Du Bellay and De Brosse to Francis I.

It is eight days since he received Francis' despatch of the 5th, containing the capitulations of the Pope with the Imperialists. Sent it on to Wolsey, with the letters of Francis and the Grand Master, knowing that they would suit his purpose admirably. Were with him by appointment next day after dinner, and did all they could to incline him towards Francis' purpose with regard to the two principal points, viz., the ratification by the Pope of the treaty of Ferrara, and the publication to be made of the articles delivered to the Pope by the Imperialists. Next day Wolsey visited the King upon the subject. Have since been twice with him, besides sending to him several times, and have urged him to make a good despatch to the English ambassadors in Spain and with the Pope, which he had admitted to be desirable. Nevertheless, it has been necessary to delay, on account of the length of the despatch, especially as, being made in English, he wished it translated into Latin, and several copies made. He is sending one to the English ambassador in France to show to Francis, and has given like instructions to those of the Emperor and the Pope; the latter of whom is to show it to the Cardinals, so as to show clearly to all Christendom the great union which exists between the two Kings. Wolsey's opinion of the two articles above-mentioned will be reported by the said ambassador. Wolsey is in great fear the Pope has made some secret treaty with the Imperialists, by which he may withdraw into the bosom (au soin, qu. sein?) of the Emperor, if he be not received on your side to his pleasure; for which reason it is needful to deal cautiously with him, especially about Florence and Ferrara. Afterwards he may be roundly asked, and by Lautrec rather than any other, what course he intends to take. Wolsey thinks also that by skilful management, neither the Florentines nor the duke of Ferrara should be lost; for, besides that they will see Lautrec's forces too near them, they are always pleading compulsion (la main garnie).

On Wednesday we were again several times with him, when we communicated your despatch of the 6th, with the procuration for Brosse, with which he was even more delighted than before, thanking you most humbly (jusques au pieds et genoulx de vostre maistre). Assuredly such despatches must tend to strengthen the friendship. He was very glad you were satisfied with the proceedings of the bishop of Worcester (Mons. de Vuiyerne), but regretted that the opinion of Bayard was so short, and contained no judgment about things to come. Explained this as due to the fact that the courier was not ours; and although the opinion was in cipher, there was danger of the letters being intercepted, and merchants would have no great difficulty in finding out the cipher.

As to the matters mentioned in your letters of the 19th, viz., the answer you make about the marriage of Scotland, the words brought by the chancellor of Spain, the procuration of the Emperor, the German Diet, the letters of the Waywode, and the state of Lautrec's army:—(1.) Your answer about the marriage of Scotland has given the greatest satisfaction to the King, who came on Thursday last to dine with Wolsey. (2.) What they think about the words of the Imperial chancellor you will perceive by Wolsey's instructions for the English ambassadors in Spain; but he intends to send a new herald "pour le relevement des dites parolles." You will also observe that the English ambassadors are instructed to follow in this matter the intentions of yours. Brosse, however, will return to you shortly, fully instructed upon this affair. (3.) Wolsey thinks the diet of Germany is a matter that requires much consideration, that Ferdinand may not seize an advantage while Christendom is otherwise occupied. You ought, therefore, to consider well what ambassadors you send thither, and he will take care to send others. Thinks it would be well to procure a delay by some means, as the diet is summoned for the first week in Lent. (4.) As to the procuration of the Emperor, he talked with us at great length, showing how it was necessary above all things to bring the Pope to our devotion, otherwise his Holiness might reveal everything to the Emperor. But if this point be gained, it will be necessary to consider the state of the common affairs:—if in war, or despair of peace, matters should be pressed with all vigor; but if peace be concluded, his Holiness should still be got to resent the great injury done to him and the Church.

(5.) Wolsey is much pleased with the article of the Waywode's letters, perceiving thereby that Ferdinand has no intention of remaining at rest, and he is of opinion that we should either come to peace or to war. In any case the Waywode should not forbear his enterprise, but should be encouraged as far as it may honorably be done, both by the Pope and by the confederates, for all means must be used to check the tyranny of the Emperor and his brother.

(6.) At last, for a bonne bouche, we reported to him the news brought by Castillon of the forces under Lautrec, and of the money sent by Francis for his enterprise; with which he was marvellously gratified, and hopes, notwithstanding the expectation of peace, that the Emperor's army in Italy will be routed; and he hopes you will make all possible solicitation to the Pope, and, if he be too cool, to the College of Cardinals, that he may enter again into the league without any dissimulation. Wolsey is writing to Gregory Casale a letter which the English ambassador will show to Francis. Yesterday, when Du Bellay was with him again, he repeated to him all that he had said on the above matters, and begged him to write them to Francis. Have not omitted a single day to urge him for a despatch. He has arranged with the King that your installation at Windsor shall take place eight days hence.

The prothonotary Gambara arrived here lately. He has spoken two or three times to Madame, and will go shortly to England. Knows that Du Bellay will see him and converse with him. Judging from his language here, he will ask the King to assist in obtaining the restitution of Ravenna [and Cervia] to the Pope by the Venetians. Du Bellay must dexterously persuade the King and Wolsey to answer to him that they would wish the Pope not to press the Venetians for this restitution at present, but to dissemble with them for a time, as he cannot fail to recover them hereafter; and in like manner to temporise with the duke of Ferrara touching the treaty lately made with him, not showing that he finds it bad and unreasonable, as things will redress themselves by and by. But you must note well how these suggestions are received, for Francis desires above all things that the King and Wolsey should find them agreeable, and if it appear otherwise, you are to notify it. Lautrec is continually advancing. St. Germain-en-Laye, 20 Jan.

Will not repeat the conversations reported in the King's letters, as Gambara is to leave three days hence. He will return to the Pope without having done much, but will henceforth be in great esteem with his Holiness, who appreciates his services highly. Since he was delivered the Pope has given him 10,000 livres of rent, and promises to do more for him still; so it will be well you should give him a good reception in passing. He maintains that if you proceed roundly with his master, determined to share his future, whatever it may be, he will join you fearlessly; otherwise not. Thinks one of the points he would insist on would be the restitution of Reggio and Modena by the duke of Ferrara, after which he is content to temporize. On this subject we entered into conversation, though he apparently did not care to have it taken up, and he proposed to give the duke of Ferrara Ravenna in compensation. You must not, however, appear to have heard anything of this from me. He also says he has communicated to Madame the true intention of the Pope on this subject, and had obtained from her in return her own opinion and that of Francis. Thinks, if this be so, it is strange that he never heard of it. Makes some observations concerning Florence and Venice, founded on Wolsey's conversations. Heard some time ago from a groom whom his brother had presented to the Pope, that the Imperialists wished to have made it a principal article in the compact that the Pope should not consent to let the king of England leave his wife, or give the Legate a commission to try the case; but this the Pope refused. States the case of the king of England. Has heard within the last three days that Dr. Kenit (Knight), returning from the Pope, is at Calais, waiting for a wind. Thinks Dr. Stephen will shortly go and take his place. Hears by a ship come from Spain that English merchants are ordered to withdraw their merchandise.

It is said that Ferdinand has gained some victory over the Waiwode.

147. Bishop of Bayonne to Francis I.

Received on Friday his letter of the 25th ult., which he took to Wolsey, and showed him at great length; but as Gambara was waiting to pay his respects, and had a great deal to communicate to him on the same subject, he asked me to visit the King on Sunday at Greenwich, which I did. Had a long conversation with Henry, first about the ill turn done by his Almoner in Spain; at which Henry expressed his displeasure, giving him the fullest assurance that it did not come from him or Wolsey, and that if it was found that any other instructions had been sent thither than those which were seen by the Grand Master when he was here, we need have no confidence in him. He said that the Almoner had acted in ignorance, and that he was a very good man, but of little experience, who had a great horror of the words "intimation of war;" but if the case were found to be as stated, he should be severely punished. I said such explanations were quite unnecessary for you, and that he need not fear you had any suspicion of his good faith, which was quite apparent in his letters, wherein the blame was laid upon the said Almoner. Moreover, that by the copy of the letter which you have sent back from Spain, you had, like a prince, reproved the said Almoner to your ambassadors, as if he had been your own servant, knowing that the union between you and Henry was such that each of you had power over the servants of the other. Moreover, that Henry had himself been the chief instigator of Francis to bring things rapidly to an issue.

Requested the King, however, to send a new declaration of his will to the Almoner, that he might no longer mistake it. Thereupon the King told him that Gambara had made to him new overtures of peace, which did not seem to him unreasonable, if Francis would approve them, as in fact he had already done, by the communication which Gambara had made to him. They are to the effect that the Emperor has intimated to the Pope his desire to come to peace; but he wished his honor preserved if England and France endeavored to lay him under constraint, and that if the Pope would interpose his authority as a neutral and common father, he would undoubtedly come to reason. Henry, therefore, thought it would be well that Gambara should go on behalf of the Pope, accompanied by two persons sent by Henry and Francis, to petition the Emperor to that effect.

He asked my opinion of this. I said it would not be easy to give one impromptu on a matter of so much importance; nevertheless, I could not but have suspicion of the Emperor and of his Council, and thought this overture tended greatly to defer and dissimulate; that I wondered you had approved of it, considering the delay that it involved in sending to the Pope, and obtaining an answer from the Emperor. This would consume three months, which is the best part of the year for making preparations, especially in providing lanceknights and other soldiers from a distance. It would secure the Emperor's Low Countries from invasion, which are of more importance than anything he could lose in Italy, as Henry and Wolsey had always represented. The King answered that the delay could not be so great, that two months would be sufficient, and that it would be far better for you to wait for certain peace in two months than to enter suddenly on an uncertain war. And as I reminded him that the answer from Spain, which he had heretofore assured himself would arrive at Christmas, had not yet come, he replied that delay was occasioned by the deliverance of the Pope, for which the Emperor was waiting, and perhaps by your illness, of which his ambassador certainly informed him, but that now all delays will be avoided.

Made no remark on this change in the King's tone; except "que si à ceste heure l'Empereur l'avait trouvé ou s'accrocher pour retardement de la finale responce, il avait encores, et son conseil aussi, l'entendement assis au lieu mesmes qu'il a eu cy devant, et que Dieu ne les a point desgarnis de cautelles pour trouver en ce faict declaration, comme il a faict aux autres." This, however, I delivered merely as my own opinion, as the King had invited me to express it freely, and begged him to think well of this matter, as one in whom Francis had the greatest confidence.

Thinks, perhaps, Gambara had something to do with this. Although he found Henry was pretty well fixed in his opinion beforehand, did not omit to discuss the matter amicably with him as far as he could, but Henry assured him the enterprise would have a very good effect, and that he had means of knowing what the Emperor's real purpose was.

I said, if he had good assurance he was right in acting upon it, but I had little doubt that you would have some regret hereafter, if you had to thank any one but him for the liberation of your children. To this he replied, with many cordial expressions, that even if the Pope did interfere in the matter, all the world would know that it was but a color, and that the real authors of the universal peace were Francis and himself. He also said that the Pope offered, in case the Emperor refused this overture, to proceed to an interdict, and take part with us against him. I doubted whether this was to be expected of his timidity, but he said he was sure of the Pope, if you and he would take him wholly under your protection. He asked if my powers were sufficient to conclude in this matter, and he would get it passed by means of the powers which Gambara held. I said my powers and will were simply to obey him by your command in everything, and I thought this point of great utility, provided the Venetians, Florentines, and Ferrara did not withdraw. He said they were ready to submit their claims to you two, for so their ambassadors had told him and Wolsey. Has endeavored to draw more information out of Gambara. Thinks he can see that this assurance of peace on the Emperor's part proceeds from the chancellor of Spain, on whom the Pope greatly relies, and to whom he owes his deliverance.

On Monday morning visited Gambara, who conversed with him much to the same effect as the King had done, promising to show him the charge he had from the Pope. He also said he had explained things fully to Madame, from whom he wished soon to have an answer, and that the Pope was content to dissimulate the affairs of Ferrara and Florence, provided the two Kings would promise to get justice done to him by the duke of Ferrara after they had settled their own business; but that as to Ravenna and [Cervia] he intended above everything to have restitution, and that if he could not have the entire friendship of Francis he would be constrained to do the best he could for himself. Went after dinner to Wolsey, whose conversation was to the same effect as that of the others. He told me he was busy about the despatch which Gambara should take with him in three or four days. He then enlarged upon the Almoner's fault, saying frequently that unless he could show a good excuse for it, his life would answer for it. He had given the same assurance to De Brosse before his departure; but as to the contribution of which we had spoken twice before De Brosse left, he said that as soon as he saw that he could do it he would use means to bring it about, for Henry was by no means satisfied with the delay made by Lautrec, who might have done things of great importance, and thereby encouraged "the said King his good brother" to come to the contribution. He said Lautrec must make up for lost time. I answered what I could; among other things, that it was not certain Lautrec had lost time, having recovered so many countries and towns, increased the number of the allies, diminished the forces of the enemy, and further brought them to reason, and delivered the Pope; that the difficulties of the commissariat should be considered, and the loss of men which takes place in such long marches, especially when towns were sacked. To this Wolsey only answered that he begged you firmly to believe that he would never fail you, but it would require time to consider about the ways and means for this contribution. Asked Wolsey what he had determined about these last letters you wrote me for urging the English ambassadors to avoid further delay. He said he had been ready to do so when Gambara arrived; in consequence of whose propositions he intends, if you think right, that the Pope should send a man express to the Emperor, and, if he do not immediately accept the peace, proceed to such censures in Spain, Italy, and Hungary that he will not know where to turn. He thinks Henry and Francis should send a man likewise, but will consult with Gambara. Thinks Gambara will not agree with it, for he said it was not the Pope's intention, unless you wished it. Understands from Gambara that the Pope's envoy shall remain, that he may thereby revoke the present ambassador, who has done you so many ill turns, and who has even preached that the money demanded by the Emperor by . . . . . and the state of St. James ought to be given him, and that such was the Pope's intention.

Is asked by Wolsey to mention that the King has the greatest possible desire to see Bude (Budæus), your master of requests, for a few days, and have a literary conversation with him, from the great esteem he has for him. Promised to write, and said he was sure that none of Francis' servants, great or little, would object to obey him, but he must not be surprised if Bude was some time in coming, owing to his age and illness.

10 Feb. 148. Du Bellay to Francis I.

MS. 5,499, p. 52. Bibl. Nat.

On Saturday I went to the Legate by appointment, to communicate to him your letters of the 2nd, which I had received the day before. I used all the arguments I could to induce him to consent to the contribution, telling him that it could no longer be alleged that Lautrec had done nothing. Finally, he asked me to have patience until he persuaded the King, whom he hoped to induce to contribute for a month or two, especially if news came that Lautrec had done anything of importance. It would be a good thing if Madame were to write to him about it, as well as Francis. As to the fixing of a day, of which you wish the English ambassadors to be informed, I wrote to you on the 6th of the resolution come to here. The Legate has since consented to it, in case Gambara's overture does not please you, and he will not fail to send you a despatch by Dr. Stephen.

Told him that the Emperor was using his customary artifices. He said that the Emperor would allow the intimation to be made, and make some preparations for war, feeling sure that when he found the end might be dangerous peace would not be refused to him; but still you were doing well to provide in time, and Henry and himself would not fail in their duty. Asked him whether, if he believed the intimation was already made, he thought that the Pope's overture to send to the Emperor should still take effect. He said, Yes, it could do no harm, but that preparations for war should not be relaxed meanwhile.

He wishes the ambassadors for Germany to wait until you send instructions, that similar instructions may be made here; but he has promised that Wallop shall send his horses over the sea to save time. I have given him your instructions of last year for the same affair, and the letters to princes; which he was very glad to see.

Showed him a letter from the bailly Robert about the descent of your fleet in Sardinia, and news of the surprise of Spaniards going from Rome past Sardinia; at which he was much pleased, and which he has kept to show the King. I think he is disposed to assist us with the contribution. I think the King "est un peu froid a tuer;" for Gambara told him that nothing would so lead the Pope to do well as to see perseverance in the contribution; to which he answered that you were not poor, and had a provision of 2,000,000 cr.

Gambara starts today on his return, with the persons I mentioned to you in my letters of the 6th. Wolsey wishes you to give him a similar despatch to that which he has received from here, and to despatch him as soon as possible.

Complains that he has no means of meeting his expences.

149. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Wrote on the 6th that nothing more was possible. Was with the Legate on Saturday, and tried hard to induce him to consent to the contribution. If peace were probable, they would be glad to save the money, but if war ensued they see they would have to play for higher stakes. Advises Montmorency to write, saying that Du Bellay's letters have given him hopes. Has received his letter of the 2nd, praising him for reconciling him (Wolsey?) to the Venetians.

Gambara starts today with Dr. Stephanus (Gardiner) and Toucques (Fox). Wolsey read him a draft of their commission to the Pope, of which he gives an account. The King has not agreed to the articles about assistance, and to that "des nonobstances." As to the first, Wolsey says that the Pope's lands are too far off to make it reasonable; and as to the second, that the King has never approved of the affair of Ferrara, which is the principal point in the article. What "le chevalier Vasel" (Casale?) did, was done without commission; but, on the other hand, the [French] king has ratified what was done. You will hear more about it from Gardiner, whom Wolsey requests you to despatch immediately.

Endeavored to get the Legate to fix a time for the Pope to issue these great thunders which he promises, especially as he could interpret the word "et incontinent" as he pleased, as the Almoner did. But he said the time was already sufficiently fixed, considering that we are bound to nothing until the Pope has fulfilled his promise, and that we need not regard the large promises made to his Holiness, for we are not bound to fulfil them until after peace or victory, when we could modify them as we liked, for we should have no need of him, but, on the contrary, he would have more need of us than now.

Spoke of the danger we incurred of losing Ferrara and the Florentines; but he denied it, saying that the Pope only wanted the signature of the two Kings, which he would keep secret, and no one in France should know it, except the King, Madame, and you. He desired me to write about it to you, and not to the King, lest the Council might see my letters; and he does not intend the English ambassador in France to know of it. He considers it a settled point that Ravenna and "Venyse" (Cervia?) should be restored, and has spoken to the Venetian ambassador and to his master about it. I think this will go off easily (s'en ira facilement), and hope you will not be vexed.

I am sure that if you do not agree to the promises Wolsey wishes made to the Pope, he will be much displeased. You should manage so that Gambara shall tell as many people as possible that if the King does [not] grant the Pope's demands, his Holiness will go over to the Emperor; and I have advised him to use such language if you make any difficulty. If afterwards you do not wish to keep your promises, especially about the duke of Ferrara, you can allege the threats he used.

Advises him also to take an authentic copy of the King's declaration in Gardiner's despatch, that he will ratify the above articles. This may hereafter be a good excuse, as at present nothing can be refused to him. Suggests the making of a secret protestation immediately. Could easily sign a declaration that Gambara has used these threats.

Has today received Montmorency's letters of the 4th, and sent them to Wolsey to assure him of the King's health, of which Gardiner had heard bad news. Advises the King to show himself, if only at a window; for the opinion here, and still more in Flanders, is that there is no possibility of his recovery. Has gone about London more in a week than he usually does in two months, to show the people that he is not in mourning.

Wolsey is contented that "Leschaussois navigue et le docteur Gervaise," both of whom he knows, should go to Germany. Montmorency should send a copy of their instructions as soon as possible, for Wallop will not start till then.

Intends to send Morette in two days, instructed about everything necessary to satisfy the King and Wolsey. Sends by this courier news from Spain and Germany to be communicated to them, and desires them to send him any further information they may have from Spain.

Since "la [diete]† Imperiale" has been put off till after Easter, before which it is not easy to obtain a safe-conduct for the ambassadors, and it is necessary to have one from all the electoral princes, for a herald, Du Bellay must ask what the King thinks should be done, and Francis will follow his counsel "entierement sans aulcun retardement ou difficulte et de . . . . . ou du retardement de leur voiage."

5 March. 153. DU BELLAY and MORETTE to MONTMORENCY.

MS. 5,499, p. 128. Bibl. Nat.

Yesterday the Imperial ambassador was with the Legate more than two hours. Afterwards the Legate sent for me, and showed me the letters which Madame Margaret had written to the Imperial ambassadors. Their substance was that the Emperor regretted that the King and Wolsey took matters in this way, and wished to give up their old friendship with him for the king of France, who was the only cause of all the evil, from his refusal to listen to reason, to surrender any towns, or withdraw his army in Italy; that there was no reason to expect he would do this afterwards, considering the experience§ the Emperor has had of his faith. As to the proposition of the king of England to give his faith to the Emperor for Francis, it seems that he should do the opposite, viz., when Francis has surrendered the towns and withdrawn his army, Henry should promise him the delivery of his sons, in the Emperor's behalf, for which security should be given as for Tournay. This offer had been made to the French ambassadors, but they would not accept it, preferring to come to the intimation of war.

Wolsey congratulated me on this, and said he saw clearly that the Emperor was much vexed, and would come to terms, which would be more honorable to the two Kings than defying him; this opportunity of peace must not be lost, as it came from the enemy; the ambassador had begged him to send a courier to the English ambassadors in Spain, or offered to go himself, to treat of this matter, and to find out what hostage and security the Emperor would give; about which he asked for my opinion.

I replied that the overture was more to deceive the [Kings] than for any other purpose, showing him the danger of giving up fortified towns, and leaving ourselves at the enemy's mercy. He answered that it was not probable that the Emperor would act thus, and he was sure his heart was set upon peace; peace would have to be negotiated, and the Princes recovered just the same, after a war. None of these reasons convinced me, and I argued the point with him, begging him not to take it ill, considering the familiarity he allows me and the other servants of the King. Finally, he said he could not help taking ill my refusal to listen to reason; he was sure the King and Madame would not discuss the matter so long. I excused myself as well as I could, seeing that he was offended, and left the point in suspense for more argument would have been of no use.

His resolution is, that a courier ought to be sent to the ambassadors in Spain with three or four overtures, of which the principal are,—1, that the King will surrender the towns and recall his army, while the king of England promises for the Emperor that the Princes shall be restored for the money, receiving hostages from the Emperor, and the promise of his lords and bishops; 2, that the Dauphin shall be exchanged for the money, and Madame Leonor go at the same time, while the duke of Orleans remains as a pledge for the surrender of the towns and recall of the army, for which the king of England shall give his word to the Emperor, and the king of France shall be subject to a penalty of 500,000 cr., and a declaration of war. I do not know if he means to send you word of this at his return from the King, but he would be much vexed if he knew that I had told you of it. He even forbade my speaking of it to monseigneur Balthazar. Was afraid of offending him by the discussion, but have left him very content. Our conversation lasted three hours.

He sees that before these negotiations we must not omit active war, nor the success of Lautrec, "et que aussi bien on ne scaurait cependant si tost prest l'armée ailleurs." They are making great preparations here, both by sea and land, but you will have to victual their ships with wheat.

I (Morette) was present at the audience of the Imperial ambassadors; for when I wished to withdraw, both the King and Wolsey desired me to stay. When they spoke of the old friendship between the Flemings and English, the King answered that if they had war now they must not blame him, but the obstinacy and ingratitude of their prince (primat), who is cause of all the evils. He spoke highly of you (Francis) and your affairs, and made me, in their sight, come into his chamber with his most familiar attendants; where he kept me for two hours talking of French matters.

Wolsey is going to Hampton Court. John de Saulx will have a safe-conduct from the King, and letters from us to the captains whom he may meet at sea. The King advises that this bearer should return to Madame Margaret for instructions for De Saulx, who will wait here. Wolsey sends a letter for the bishop of Bath. I, Morette, will revisit the King in two days. London, 5 March.

The coming hither of the sieur de Castillon, the present bearer, has been of great service. When the bishop of Bath comes to France you must do your best to make him good cheer, and had better send back Castillon to meet him with hackneys, for he cannot go in post. I suppose Morette cannot be far from here. It would be a great kindness to cause him to stop in my place. He seems fit for the charge. I wish you would order me to urge the descent of these 1,000 English to aid in diverting the effort Ferdinand intends to make in Italy, and that the Emperor may hear that war has commenced, and give up his vain hope that there will be no trouble from this quarter. The Spaniards and Flemings do not cease to boast that the king of England dares not make war on them. This, more than anything else, would cause the Emperor to attend to the new articles, which are to be sent to him. London, 12 March.

Will send the letters after Castillon, as they are of little importance.

Yesterday the Lord Chamberlain came to me to speak about the corn with which the King expected to be supplied from France. He dared not start with his men until he heard that there was corn at Guisnes for them. Told him that I had written to the King and you, and that Castillon had gone in haste that there might be no delay about it; that you would send immediately to Mons. de Brienne to provide for a few days, until the King had made other provision; and I begged him to hasten his passage. He said he would be there in 14 or 15 days, but could not go earlier, as his illness had prevented his raising men until now. This delay will please the people, for meanwhile the English may have recovered their goods in Flanders. "Desja sont leurs personnes de deça."* And they have been magnificently feasted by Madame Margaret, and all along their journey.

The Chamberlain desires provision to be made thus; viz., that leave be given to the people of Guisnes to buy corn at Boulogne, Monstreuil, and other places. In order to hasten the descent, I have written to Brienne to buy a certain quantity and have it delivered. There is not much danger in letting it come out of the kingdom, considering the season. If only Frenchmen are allowed to import it (d'en tirer), as the King and Wolsey have asked, and not English, I ask that preference may be given to me.

I am hourly expecting the Legate to send to me for the despatch of the bishop of Bath.

He is at Hampton Court, and on Friday the King will be at Richmond, where he will stay till Easter. He has sent a safe-conduct to Madame Margaret for the ambassadors. Wolsey has spoken to the merchants of this town (London), who came to him, so that there is no more cloth in the market. The movements which were commencing in the country have been put down, for this time; and I think good order will be taken for the future. News has come that Monsieur de Gueldres, with 1,500 men bearing the Burgundian cross, have sacked la Haye in Holland, and, after receiving 20,000 florins not to burn the town, returned.

News of the 17th has come from Gerningan, that Lautrec's affairs prosper. I am expecting news from you by Morette. Concerning the prizes at sea, I have sent you word by Castillon. Advises dissimulation, considering the cries of the people. London, 19 March.

26 March. 158. DU BELLAY and MORETTE to FRANCIS I.
MS. 5,499, p. 57. Bibl. Nat.

Went on Sunday morning to the King at Richmond, where the Legate was also.

Morette delivered his letters, and told them the principal points of his charge. The King and Legate received him honorably, and bade them return to London in the afternoon, and attend on the King at Hampton Court on the Monday evening.

On arriving there, found Wolsey busy with the Imperial ambassador and lady Margaret's secretary. On their departure, were with him three or four hours. Explained every point of my (Morette's) charge, and gave him my instructions, which he read through, making observations about each article, and told us to wait for the resolution until the King's arrival.

He told us that the secretary had been sent by lady Margaret to declare her regret that, for want of means to compose the differences between you and the Emperor, the proposed articles of peace could have no effect, and all Christendom would recommence war; and she begged Wolsey to use his influence with France and England, while she would do the like with the Emperor. He proposed a method of peace, which she thought the Emperor would accept if it were put forward by the two Kings. It was one of the methods carried by the bishop of Bath, viz. that you should surrender Genoa, Aste and Hesdin, and then the Dauphin be delivered in exchange for the money; after which you would withdraw your army, and the duke of Orleans be delivered; the king of England to be security, and receive hostages from both parties, for the performance of the conditions. Lady Margaret requests you to send her a safe-conduct for a gentleman to carry these conditions to the Emperor, with urgent reasons for adopting them for herself and his subjects in the Low Countries; which she is sure he will not refuse. She wishes also a general truce on this side the mountains for three months, and that affairs in Italy should remain in the same state as when these terms are accepted until peace is solemnly sworn. Asked the Legate to send this article to the bishop of Bath; but he said it was not necessary, as it was already in this form among the others. Lady Margaret's secretary has already returned. Wolsey requests you to send a blank safe-conduct to Cambray for the gentleman whom she intends to send to Spain, and he has promised that it shall be there in a few days. As to the abstinence of war, he desires my Lady and you to publish it. The gentleman shall consult you about publishing it on the frontiers of Spain, on his way to the Emperor.

We have shown him the little profit you will derive from the truce, and the suspicion it will cause your confederates; but he repeats that he begs you to agree to it, as he is sure that it is the best course, and he has been moved to promise it on his honor; the truce is sure to lead to peace, but a general war cannot bring you much advantage. He asked us to write to you about it immediately, but we think he will be contented with a truce of two months, which would be better than three.

Yesterday I, Morette, declared the whole of my charge to the King and Legate, viz. concerning the war in Flanders, the contribution, Wallop's charge, and the despatch of Gambara and the bishop of Pistoja, not omitting the prizes taken at sea, and other points. They think it advisable that the English and French forces should assemble near Therouenne at the end of June. We found the King as cold as possible about the contribution, saying that he could not do so much, now that he had to join the dance himself. I, Du Bellay, said you would think I had deceived you, as I had always had such hopes of it from him, and told you that at Morette's arrival he would come to the resolution you desired. He replied that he had given a liberal answer before the intimation, being sure that the Emperor would not make war; but finding himself mistaken, he had reckoned up his affairs, and was obliged to give a different answer. He gave us a long account of his expences, and spoke also about the victuals. He told us to advise you, at the beginning of this dance, not to incur expences that you could not support, and to consider whether you could for long keep two great armies, one in Italy and one here, seeing that you say you cannot keep one without the contribution from him; and you should therefore consider whether it would be well to make such a great effort in Flanders as is stipulated in the treaty, or diminish it so as to bear the expences in Italy with more ease. He does not say this from a wish to back out of the treaty, for the increase in Italy would be borne by him as well as you. He wishes to know your pleasure, and will be always ready to do what you think most injurious to the enemy, in attacking whom he will never desert you, and what will most conduce to the recovery of your sons, which he desires more than anything in the world; but to effect which he thinks peace the best method, as the saving of the expence of war might be counted as a gain. He requests your attention to the articles which the bishop of Bath will declare to you, and that you will allow the bishop of Pistoja to proceed, charged with good words, after the bishop of Bath has handled him a little.

We urged them to be ready to march at the end of May, but in vain. Their chief reason is, that the grass is too short to cut for the horses before the middle of June, and therefore an army could not be kept in the field. Used all possible arguments at Richmond in the presence of the Legate, the Lord Chamberlain, Fitzwilliam and the lord Marquis. The King's resolution is to have everything ready by the end of June, and he assures us upon his honor that he will not fail, and hopes that you will not, either in men, victuals or "arrivages" (carriages?), which he cannot get without you.

However, they think that the present good opportunity of being sought by the enemy for peace should not be lost, and that we could not gain greater honor than to have compelled him to seek an appointment. They do not, however, intend to omit anything in the preparations for war; and the Lord Chamberlain (Sandes) is going to raise men on Thursday or Friday, so as to be ready to cross the sea at Easter. As they expect you to accept a truce he will not make war, but wait for an answer from Spain. His passage will serve as a demonstration to lady Margaret. They beg you to supply other provisions as well as corn. As they are difficult to move to war, you should be gracious, especially about provisions.

Although they hoped that your charge to the prothonotary Gambara would be like theirs, still they think that the charge you have sent will be for the best, chiefly because they have found out from the bishop of Pistoja that Gambara's charge from the Pope was not as ample as he had given out. They also advise you to cause the Signory to surrender Ravenna and Cervia* without delay; which they cannot honorably refuse to do, nor can they fail to comply with your request. The King seemed very angry with the Signory, because their ambassador had told him that they seized it only to keep it for the Pope.

He told us to write to you what he had said, and that he would not be surprised if the Pope did not take your part if you would [not] gratify him in a matter so reasonable; for he could not be expected to allow his own states to be divided, to preserve the Venetians in their possession of what was his. However, he does not think it well that the Pope, having recovered Ravenna, &c., should declare himself suddenly, without trying if the Emperor would accept the offers; for there is news from many quarters that the Emperor repents his refusal, and is willing to come to an agreement by his Holiness's intercession, whose declaration, moreover, would do you little good.

Touching the prizes taken by the Spaniards at sea, they think you should not refuse the abstinence of war, and thus this article would be unnecessary. If you will not accept it, they do not object to your making vigorous war in the sea of Dole, this sea being included in the abstinence. If you do not wish to commence war, they will advise with the ambassadors from lady Margaret, who are daily expected.

The King approves of the preparation of your ships in Normandy. He has already sent four great ships to sea, and four others will be ready in a few days to keep the sea; but to try to prevent Beaurain passing would be useless expence, for he could not be stopped from going round Ireland, or some other way, as Albany did lately when he passed to Scotland in spite of them.

They hear that he has already started for Naples.

We have spoken about the delay in despatching Wallop. I believe he has already left you to return hither. They think of sending a letter to the electors after the form of yours.

During this conversation, which lasted two hours, the King used very good and honorable words, assuring us of his friendship and his intention of sharing your fortunes. At Richmond he caused Morette to be present at his levée, bidding him act as if he was with his master. He showed great pleasure at hearing of Francis' good health.

Today the King returned to Richmond and left us with the Legate, who recapitulated the points that had been treated, putting us in great hopes of peace with the Emperor, and urging us to procure the despatch of the safe-conduct. In reply to all we had said to the King and himself in favor of war, he made a long protestation of the indissoluble amity his master and himself feel for the French King, but they were already at great expence; he was blamed for having deserted their old friends, against the wish of the people, to take the friendship and share the fortune of those who never had been held as friends; he spoke of the difficulty of keeping the people in subjection, and the great loss the King will sustain in taxes from the decrease of commerce; and he himself would be obliged to advance large sums of money to buy cloth to keep the Fen country from mutiny and starvation. All this was to lead up to the contribution, about which and other things he begged you to allow him to use his own means with the King, as the best means of doing for you what he desires. He used this language twice,—that there was neither man nor devil able to sever this friendship,—addressing himself particularly to me, Morette, and begging me to assure you and Madame of their friendship, on my life and honor, for which he pledged me his faith; and which I promised to do. The contribution is not hopeless, but he wants time for it.

We then talked about the articles sent by the bishop of Bath. Being pressed to answer, we said that we saw little security for you in the articles about the revocation of the army, though we could not speak against them now, as he approved of them. He said he thought that the revocation of the army, on hostages and security given by the Emperor, was one of the best methods. In reply to our question what sufficient hostages the Emperor could give, he said he had discussed that point with the Imperial ambassador, putting it as far off as possible; and the ambassador had told him that he would give the son of the constable of Spain, the son of a great marquis, and the nephew of the duke of Alva, with obligations from lords and princes; Wolsey, however, had always prevented him from speaking of it.

We asked him whether it would be necessary to send here if you agreed to only some of the articles sent by the bishop of Bath; but he told us the Bishop had charge to send on to Spain only those which pleased you.

He also spoke again earnestly about the restitution of Ravenna and Cervia,* about which he said that he and the King had written to you.

Writes in answer to their long letters, which the King has seen. His letters will fully explain his intention. The King also sends back to you with an answer the articles shown him by the bishop of Bath. He would never have consented to them, but for his affection for the King, and his wish not to put him to expence. He desires to act in accordance with Henry's advice, as you will see by what is sent you herewith to be shown to the King and Wolsey, who must be asked to keep the whole thing secret, for fear of the effect produced by the knowledge of it on the allies. When this is performed Morette must execute the charge given him at his departure, setting forth the King's diligence in providing lanceknights, having no doubt that the same has been done by the king of England, according to the treaty. Wishes him to return as soon as possible with ample instructions.

Langey will give the bishop of Bayonne an answer to what he told Montmorency on the part of the Bishop. They will see by what is sent them the King's answer to the Imperial ambassador, whom he has allowed to return to his master, and has had conducted to the frontier, hoping that the French ambassadors will be similarly treated.

The King is in good health and spirits. He left Madame at St. Germains yesterday, suffering from gout in her hand and knee. The King is going hence to Annet today to spend Easter.

160. FRANCIS I. and CHARLES V.

"Memoyres contenans certaines remonstrances et persuasions ouvertes et proposées par le roi d'Angleterre et cardinal d'York, Legat, tendans a faire condescendre le Roy très Chrestien au partis par eux mis en avant pour estre proposez à l'Empereur, et parvenir au traicté de paix d'entre luy et le dit Roy."

The King and Wolsey, having considered the answer returned by Francis to the offers made by the bishop of Bath, are persuaded either that the Bishop could not have set forth to him at sufficient length the grounds on which each of these offers is made, or that the council of Francis have not had leisure to consider them, otherwise such an answer would hardly have been returned. For, first, if the difference between him and the Emperor were discussed with impartiality, every one would say that the first point to be considered was the King's captivity, and the promises he gave to the Emperor in the treaty of Madrid, for the fulfilment of which the children are now detained. It is true that by the intercession of England the rigour of that treaty has been much abated in relation to Burgundy and other matters; but it must be considered that the Emperor wishes to make his reckoning of the said diminution, so as to be able to say, when they come to terms, that Francis ought to trust him, since he had already trusted Francis, and that peace is not less necessary to Francis than to the Emperor.

As to the three offers to be sent on to the Emperor, it is certain that the first will [not] be granted, seeing that it has already been refused, and the last has been refused also in these or other terms. As to the second, which is the most reasonable, viz., to place the towns of Genoa and Hesdin in the hands of Henry as a pledge for the accomplishment of the other things, the King and Wolsey will be much gratified if the Emperor would accept it, especially if they see that it is a thing that can take effect; which, however, they do not think it can, even if the Emperor should accept it, as Henry has no means of keeping Genoa, for the expence of sending men thither would be enormous, and the number required very large, and the voyage so long that they would lose half the men upon the road; and even if they all came, they would be unable to keep it, if the Emperor made an effort to retake it. Moreover, to use mercenaries would be attended with many difficulties, which are set forth. But it is not likely the Emperor will accept it, for, as Francis knows, the offer has already been made to him, before Henry had declared his strict alliance with Francis; and now he must regard England as his enemy, and may say that he might as well surrender the town to Francis as to Henry; so that to put forward such an offer would be wilfully to waste time. However, the King and Wolsey consent to put forward this offer at a venture, to see if anything can be got out of it. As to what Francis says, that by refusing this offer the Emperor would show clearly he had no confidence in Henry, that is nothing new, and nothing to the purpose, seeing that the king of England himself has declared war against him.

For these reasons the King and Wolsey think that if Francis wish to show his inclination for peace and the deliverance of his children, he should make no difficulty about submitting these offers to the Emperor by degrees, as hereafter will be set forth; otherwise it will be suspected that he has some object he does not wish them to know. First, however, the King and Wolsey most earnestly protest that they have no other object in their suggestions than the peace of Christendom and the recovery of the French king's children, and urge him to consider well what suspicions they must entertain so long as they see the Princes remaining hostages in the Emperor's hands, which is the only thing that keeps up his reputation, and of the terror he may cause to everybody, in comparison with which it is little to have acquired the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, or even great part of Flanders or Spain, seeing that every one believes he will give up everything for his children, "demeurans en blancs ceulx qui trop avant se seront mis en le paternostre." But if this instrument be taken from him, it will be the first step to his thorough humiliation. In proof of his sincerity, Wolsey has entreated Du Bellay and Morette to assure Francis of his willingness to go over at Easter and take the sacrament in his presence.* The King and Wolsey are willing also, on the Emperor refusing the conditions under-mentioned, to give liberal aid, without the defiance, although they are only bound by treaty to do so on the Emperor refusing the conditions signed by the French king, among which is the revocation of his army; for now that France has gained a large portion of the kingdom of Naples, it could not be said that he renounced his title thereto without recalling it, as the renunciation would otherwise be mere words, which could easily be revoked.

England is ready to send in the beginning of July troops into France, at least if Francis will maintain them according to the overtures, provided Francis on his part will do the like, to attack Flanders; but Francis must show clearly that he will do his part. The King and Wolsey approve of the opinion of Francis that none of the allies should be informed that he is willing to listen to new overtures, and think that no one should meddle with the matter except Wolsey and lady Margaret.

The former shall send a trusty person to Francis with the offers devised by him and Henry; and he, when Francis has signified which he prefers, shall proceed by post to Spain, accompanied by a servant of lady Margaret, who shall persuade the Emperor to accept them. Wolsey shall promise the Emperor on his honor that Francis will agree to the said offers. The persons sent shall be Silvestre Davir (Darius) and John de Faulx (Saulx).

If Francis prefers other offers he can add them to those sent, but he is requested to inform the bishop of Bath of them, that they may be added to the instructions of Darius.

The King and Wolsey propose that the French ambassadors now leaving Spain shall remain on the frontier till they hear of the success of these negotiations. If successful, they shall return with new powers to the Emperor to confirm the peace. Francis is requested to send such powers to his ambassadors. Those for the bishop of Worcester* and the Almoner†, shall be sent to the bishop of Bath to be shown to him. The bishop of Bath will send on the offers to the bishop of Worcester in cipher, that he may prepare the way. The king of England intended to recall his ambassadors in Spain with the French, and requested the Imperial ambassador to leave; but he said he had no commandment to do so, and would not leave without a command from the King not to stay in England. Wolsey thinks this a fortunate circumstance.

The King has, therefore, given Wolsey power to set forth such offers as he shall think good; and Wolsey requests Francis frankly to declare his will to him by his ambassadors, but nevertheless hopes he will not take ill the said overtures, seeing that it can create no danger to him to deliver Genoa, Aste and Hesdin, upon the sureties which he will receive from the Emperor, and upon the faith of the king of England, who would secure him against treachery by the Emperor.

Also, as Francis justly fears to awake the suspicions of his allies by putting any of his subjects in communication with an envoy of lady Margaret, it shall appear to be Wolsey's own act; or, if thought better, the communications shall be carried on entirely in secret. Above all, Francis is advised to consider that God has perhaps given him some advantage in his affairs that the Emperor might be more easily brought to reason, and that it would not be well to throw away the opportunity, lest on a turn of fortune the Emperor insist on other terms; that he ought now to procure the liberation of his sons at all hazards, rather than incur new losses of men and money; that he is bound by his treaties with England to be reasonable, and that he can accept the terms offered without the slightest risk.

161. MONTMORENCY to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE and MORETTE.

You will see by the King's letters his desire to hear what resolution has been taken by the king of England upon Morette's charge, and he is very desirous of his return. Since Morette left France, the King has been at great expence in raising lanceknights and other troops, besides the expence of Lautrec's army.

As to the prizes at sea, at the request of Henry Francis has ordered his subjects to abstain from taking any, but the Flemings have been invading the coast of Picardy and Normandy. Within the last few days they have taken three or four vessels near Boulogne, a thing England would not advise Francis to submit to.

If these things continue, they will provoke a severe revenge upon the first opportunity. Francis has, therefore, authorized his subjects to defend themselves, both in Guyenne, where the Spaniards have done much damage, and on the coasts of Brittany, Normandy, and Picardy; and he has written to Mons. 28 April. 162. PROPOSITIONS FOR PEACE.

MS. 5,499, f. 3. Bibl. Nat.

Proposals of Wolsey for a peace between Charles V. and Francis I., conveyed to the latter by Morette, 28 April 1528.

The King and Wolsey recommend,—(1) that when peace is made between the Emperor and Francis, the latter shall deliver to the Emperor the sum already agreed upon in ready money, and the sureties already offered for the remainder, in which case the king of England, having first obtained of the Emperor the indemnity of his promise, obligation and hostages sufficient, shall bind himself to Francis to restore his children, and on their being restored Francis shall recall his army; for security of which recall, and for restitution of the towns acquired in the kingdom of Naples, the king of England, having first obtained sureties of Francis, shall bind himself with him to the Emperor under a penalty of a million and a half, with this addition, that in case Francis do not presently withdraw his army and restore the said towns, England shall take part with the Emperor against him. (2) A day shall be arranged on which the towns of Genoa, Aste, and Hesdin shall be restored to the Emperor. That same day 1,200,000 cr. shall be paid by Francis, bonds being given for the surplus; and the Dauphin shall be delivered the same instant. And to remove any suspicion that the Emperor may entertain from not hearing of the delivery of the towns, Francis shall place hostages in the hands of the king of England, who shall be delivered up to the Emperor, if the towns have not been surrendered on the day fixed. Likewise the Emperor shall bind himself and deliver hostages to England, that, without waiting for news of the restitution of the towns, he will accept the 1,200,000 cr. and sureties, and deliver the Dauphin, so that if he do not fulfil his promise England may deliver his hostages to Francis. A day shall also be assigned for the recall of the army, which shall be inserted apart in the treaty of peace, and for this the duke of Orleans shall remain a hostage, as in the first and second articles delivered to the bishop of Bath; and it would be very desirable that in all the treaties where mention is made of hostages from the Emperor, the nobles of Spain should bind themselves for greater surety,—a point which should be urged as strongly as possible; but in default of it, the following alternatives are proposed. (3) That between the Emperor and Francis peace shall be arranged, and the latter, showing the first token of confidence, shall deliver the above towns and places; which done, immediately at Bayonne, or on these frontiers, he shall have ready 1,200,000 cr., and obligations for the remainder; at which time the Dauphin and the said money and obligations shall be delivered on either side, the duke of Orleans still remaining in the Emperor's hands as a hostage for the recall of the army and the restitution of the towns which shall have been acquired in the kingdom of Naples. Francis shall be bound to make this restitution immediately on the delivery of the Dauphin, and, that being done, the Emperor shall be bound to set at liberty the duke of Orleans; for security of which the obligation and oath of the Emperor will be enough, because the withdrawal of the army and the restitution of the places taken in Naples will be of more consequence to him than the retention of the duke of Orleans. Thus each party in turn will have placed some confidence in the other.

Articles 4 to 9 are mere variations of the preceding alternatives.

Is writing to Francis. Has considered well all that he has written. Found Wolsey on Saturday in such perplexity that he did not expect so good an issue. I think God helped me to reply to him. I would not promise always to make so good an answer. I believe he will be much vexed if they do not trust him with this amplification of articles (de user de cette ampliation d'articles), and that not accepting it, this contribution passed for this season, he will not readily take the burden again upon his shoulders.* I say advisedly, this burden, for assuredly it is he who bears it towards the King his master, who loves to spend money, and very few of his counsel advise him so, least of all to go to war, whatever good might come of it. Think, then, what they can do when they don't expect any advantage. To persuade them to concurrence he was obliged to suggest to them that the Emperor would not refuse the offers; and now that they see what has come of it they would cry murder on him if they dared, as he is not without fear they will. I know he takes all possible pains to vindicate the conduct of Francis. He asked me why Francis wished to send a gentleman? I said I did not know, unless it was to explain to him why he had not accepted all his articles. He shook his head slightly, and said they did not need to use so much respect towards him, and that I could explain to him more in an hour than a gentleman could in a day, especially as they do not understand him except through an interpreter. I have often told you they take pleasure, in my opinion, in having gentlemen here frequently; there are so many presents given. I should be very sorry you thought they annoyed me. Nothing could be more agreeable to me, for several reasons. I am more troubled with this Chancellor than with the affairs of Francis; but, in truth, I care little about him and his great horses (swaggering), for he cannot do more harm than he has done to me and my brother. I think, in speaking to the bishop of Bath, he means to make open war on the Legate. If so, he will make a wound that all Auvergne and all the herbs of Limaigue will not heal; for you know whether Wolsey is a man to wear his heart upon his sleeve. "J'entendz bien que par ce chemin me feray tout d'or si n'y a-t-il remede." Writes about it to the queen of Navarre, and hopes she will take the matter up. You know what cause I have had to complain of him, but the consequences must be left to God. Would rather be thought unwise now than be charged with remissness hereafter.

You may be sure the matter of the contribution would have gone on much better if I had been informed that Francis had approved of the truce, and how affairs stood in Italy, &c. I am at a great disadvantage when they know everything and I nothing. I have already asked Morette and Castillon to urge this on you. You had better write to me that you perceive from my letters how entirely devoted Wolsey is to France. Wolsey is informed that the Pope is willing to wait still in the matter about Ravenna and Cervia. The lords have been sent into the country,—among others, Norfolk, who is at home in great danger from a catarrh. The captains who were beginning to muster are countermanded. Expects instructions about the answer of the truce. Has done what he could about Gueldres. What I have written in the end of the King's letter is not as advocate for one or other party, but merely that you may see how matters stand. "Au surplus, Monseigneur, si jusques icy avez ung peu point ceulx de deça bien de par Dieu; mais je crois que c'est assez." Nothing is more true than that Wolsey did not wish the King (Francis?) to understand it in full, and perhaps he would not have taken it over well. You know they will hardly ever admit that they have been wrong. "Je ne dis pas que d'une touche y

164. PROPOSALS FOR PEACE.

"Discours des conditions et moyens de paix praticquez par mons. le Legat en Angleterre pour icelle accorder entre l'Empereur et le Roy tres Chrestien."

The following opinion of the King and Legate has been debated by their Council, and put in writing to be sent to Francis by the bishop of Bayonne and Morette, in accordance with what the bishop of Bath will inform him.

Wm. des Barres, lady Margaret's secretary, being in London before Easter eve, came on Monday morning with the Imperial ambassador and John de Saulx to inform the Legate that Madame, in her desire for peace, would communicate the Legate's proposals to the chief lords of the Low Countries, in order that an opinion may be sent to the Emperor which may induce him to preserve the peace of Christendom. L'escuyer —— has already been sent with letters on this subject from various lords to the Emperor and his chancellor. Madame and her Council think the Emperor will accept the offer contained in the 14th article of the obligations mentioned below. The Legate showed them reasons against the articles, and advises the delivery of Genoa, Aste and Hesdin to the king of England, or, at least, of hostages as security that when these towns are surrendered by the French king the Emperor will perform his part, and set free the Princes. He told them that there was no means of bringing the French king to any other overture, and that even now he has not consented to this, although Wolsey has urged him to do so. They assured Wolsey that, if this method does not take effect, Madame Margaret would not meddle further, being assured it would be useless, as the Emperor may be expected to be obstinate in consequence of the news of the loss received by Monseigneur de ———* in Naples, and the overtures of Milan, and he would not like to throw away all the expence he has incurred in military preparations. Finally, he told them how doubtful it was whether Francis would approve of these conditions, which he had taken great pains to make him do; and he gave them reasons why Madame should not object to the delivery of hostages to the king of England.

Afterwards he proposed that Francis should deliver to the Emperor Aste and Hesdin, Genoa remaining until the liberation of the Dauphin, or that he should first deliver Genoa, and the other two towns remain, so that meanwhile the remainder of the conditions in the 4th chapter of the conditions specified below should be retained.

To this the ambassadors replied that there was no objection to proposing the overtures about the hostages to Madame Margaret if she can be induced to propose them to the Emperor. The seigneur de Marnech shall be sent to the Emperor, going first to Paris, where the bishop of Bath shall procure him a safe-conduct. Silvester Devir (Darius?) shall accompany him, charged with offers to be made to the Emperor. If, however, the French king does not approve of the offers advised by Henry and Wolsey, and the bishop of Bath has no hope of success, "s'en retourneront le dit De Marnech que Silvestre en arrive."

Henry and Wolsey have taken much trouble in this matter, and do not think that the French king will refuse the 4th article, if modified with advantageous conditions. If the Emperor, however, entirely refuses, they advise the King to consider the matter himself, protesting that they have given him such advice as they would themselves have acted on in a similar case. Seeing that there is fear of exciting the Flemings, he has showed the French ambassadors his desire to avoid war, and he does not think that the Emperor will refuse the said 4th article, as both he and his master had told the provost of Cassel, when returning to Madame Margaret, that they were resolved to make war at the beginning of June, so that if the Imperialists wished to come to terms they must do so quickly; whereupon Madame sent back William des Barres immediately, while Marnech waited at Valenciennes so as not to lose time. Both she and her ambassadors declared that they were certain that the Emperor would not refuse Des Barres' offer, the seigneur de Montfort being with her, and knowing the Emperor's mind. Besides, the Imperial ambassador being told to leave England refused, unless the King would not suffer him to stay in his country, for he did not think peace was hopeless.

The King and Wolsey therefore earnestly request Francis not to lose this opportunity of obtaining peace for Christendom and recovering his children.

Wolsey also wishes to remind the King of the Emperor's demand, which he thinks Francis ought to grant, if nothing better can be obtained, that on withdrawal of the French army, and surrender of the places already mentioned, the Emperor will restore the Princes for the aforesaid sum of money. This method Wolsey thinks secure for Francis, for the hostages having left Spain, and the Emperor remaining there, he would not dare to break his word. He begs Francis to consider this well, for there will be no question of anything but the retreat of the army and surrender of the towns, as the money will not be paid until the deliverance of the Princes.

The Imperial ambassadors would agree to the surrender of the towns by the French king to the king of Portugal, but not to the duke of Savoy, whose nephew the French king is, nor to a certain number of cardinals, who might wish to revenge the injuries they have suffered from the Emperor.

Wolsey thinks no harm could arise from a truce for this side of the mountains during the negotiations; but if Francis thinks otherwise, he might send to the bishop of Bayonne a power to conclude it, which should not be used except by his master's special order; but if it was necessary hereafter, it would save much time for the Bishop to have it with him.

Has communicated the letters of Francis to Wolsey. Could not make out, even by his countenance, that he was well satisfied with the overtures for peace.

He began again about these reasons, but I cut him short, having done what I could for his satisfaction, and told him that Francis was quite determined; on which he expressed himself in their favor, and said Francis could not have done better. He is waiting to hear from the bishop of Bath. I will not fail to follow the way marked out by the King's letters. Wolsey says that the English will be ready to descend in Flanders by the middle of June.

Excuses himself for having spoken about his long stay here.

I had great difficulty in persuading the Legate that matters had been well looked to, because I showed no attestation from you; for he trusts in your management of affairs that touch his master, and hears on all sides that you favor his affairs. He is satisfied with the power, but has not used it in speaking of the truce, but only in general. He has not yet decided about

166. Du Bellay to Montmorency.

This morning Wolsey sent for me to tell me of his discussion yesterday with the Imperial ambassador and lady Margaret's secretaries, and of the manner in which he had urged the King to come to the truce, and also to consult, in the presence of the bishop of London, Fitzwilliam, More, and Brian Tuke, of the matter contained in Francis' letter of the 21st. Has been occupied with the subject all day, and has done his best to preserve the interests of Francis. They wished me to accept as an improvement the change from an armed force to a contribution, but I considered it the contrary. I have been much urged to agree to this contribution at the term of four months. Will not state the reasons he gave in opposition. Compelled them to go back to the terms in his letter, that they should make a corresponding contribution, equivalent to what they would have spent in a war. This they estimated at 32,000 cr. If he can get no more, thinks he will not do ill if he secure 40,000 cr. without term prefixed.

They insisted for a long time that they could not make war by sea against Spain, but he gained his point with some difficulty. As to the form of the truce, yesterday the Spaniard spoke in a boasting manner, and has been very urgent to wait until June (fit fort le brave, et a fait grande instance d'attendre le mois de Juin). Hears from Du Biez that Fiennes is making large musters. Does not know if the English wished to delay on this account, and as an excuse for not sending the men of the Lord Chamberlain, who will, without doubt, leave tomorrow.

Has engaged to get the truce published as soon as it is passed and sworn. Is to confer about it with the English and Imperial ambassadors tomorrow.

They wish somewhat to modify his memorandum, and also the power and the articles, for which he will have to stay up all night. Hopes nothing important will be altered, except changing the 800,000 cr. for the Dauphin to 1,200,000; but they decline to come to a conclusion till they hear from the bishop of Bath. They have been rather unmanageable about the proposals of Francis. Is certain they would like to publish the truce in four days, and have it published in Flanders at the same time, or at the latest in eight days. Thinks the sooner the better.

168. Du Bellay to Montmorency.

Asks for an answer to his letter to the King. Had never so much trouble in preventing himself from letting things slip (de passer les choses) as yesterday. You will see what the Legate refuses to grant. Dom Diego (Inigo) de Mandosse extolled the Emperor and his deeds highly. Protested that I would not discuss the matter with him, as he knew well how the dispute between our masters stood.

Wolsey told lady Margaret's secretaries that if they did not agree to the truce on my articles, the French king would withdraw in consequence of the success of Lautrec; and he bade me recount the recent news I had received. When I mentioned the disaster of the Marquis del Guasto, Mendoza became quite furious, and threatened he would have laid hands on me if we had been outside. Could not help laughing, and asked him whether it would be with his crosier or his bauble. Afterwards, when I made my protest to Wolsey, he allowed me to speak without taking it ill. I said that he had not acted honorably, and that if he did not execute his threat, I should not consider him a gentleman, but if he did, I hoped to give him a good drubbing; protesting that I spoke neither as a bishop nor as an ambassador. His chancellors replied that when he spoke of un coup, not knowing French well, he meant un coup de langue. I said that I was contented with this retractation. It would have been fine sport to have seen us fight with our crosiers and mitres. His chancellors had before asked me not to take it ill, as Spanish lords were naturally hot-blooded. The end was that he was thought an archfool. During the skirmish, Wolsey tried to pacify us, and refused me audience, but afterwards congratulated me on the way I had done my duty. Asks for a reply and instructions. London, 15 May.

Lady Margaret's ambassadors are sending letters also this morning. If there had not been this difficulty, we should gain a month, or at least half, but I have not dared to exceed my orders.

"Abrégé faict de l'esclaircissement qui se pourroit faire des articles portez par Messire Silvestre pour estre proposez à l'Empereur."

Setting forth various considerations leading to the conclusion that Francis need run no risk for the sake of peace, except Aste and Hesdin, for the revocation of the army of the Sieur de St. Paul ought not to be so considered, and the money will not be paid except upon the delivery of the children; so that if Francis will be reasonable, he should have them in his hands before Christmas, or at all events before Candlemas; and if he consents to this, he has only to send some one to Spain to join with Silvester and the other ambassadors, and with power to conclude; but if he think he has greater security by the overture of Salviati, Wolsey agrees that he should pursue it.

so, is willing to agree to it for Wolsey's satisfaction. Commands what he has done in urging the contribution and loan (commutation) for the war in Italy. Desires him to get it continued during the term of the truce, showing the King and Wolsey that Francis is not less friendly than he was last year, and that he has now very heavy expences.

The alteration the English wish to make in Du Bellay's powers is not agreeable to him.

The subjoined article will show what he wishes altered. As to the amended draft of the truce, desires that the provision that each party should return to their former possessions should be expressed in general terms, and some other modifications made.

Has given orders for the publication of the truce in Picardy and along the frontiers. Hopes the King and Wolsey will appreciate the motives which have induced him to alter the draft.

173. WAR WITH CHARLES V.

Discourse held in May between Wolsey and the duke of Suffolk touching the war to be undertaken against the Emperor in case peace be not made between him and Francis.

The King and Wolsey, having discussed with Suffolk the conduct of the said war, propose to deliver to Francis three overtures touching the form of the aid to be given him in an invasion of the Low Countries; viz., either to adhere to the treaty for offensive war, and send 10,000 English foot, or two other alternatives.

Wolsey and Suffolk have discussed the matter together privately, without speaking to the King their master, or any of his councillors, but have mentioned it in confidence to the bishop of Bayonne, to inform the King his master, for whose benefit the whole enterprise is to be undertaken, that he may himself indicate by Du Bellay which of the three ways he should prefer. Objections to employing too many mercenaries, and suggestions of the danger that might arise from a large number of French and English being brought together, and quarrelling about lodgings or provisions.

Would rather be in the Indies than in his present torment. Asks if he shall follow the last minute, which ends thus: "Le tout accordé soubz le bon plaisir des princes."

Does not know how to act concerning the final restrictions, which annul all that precedes. Thinks Montmorency will approve of the words of the intercourse. There is no need for suspicion that the English are acting deceitfully, though of course every one looks after his own interest.

Chamberlain's servant, Rob. Chambar, and Master Carro's servant, remain in Calais till the King send a discharge to the council of Calais. The poor man is distressed at not hearing from Chamberlain in answer to his letters. Understands that Mr. Ellyat has made a riot of the business beside Woodstock, when Chamberlain met him hunting, and has almost undone the poor men of Woodstock by summoning them to London at their own cost. My lord Cardinal has made him clerk of the Council. Mr. Carro is in sanctuary in his own country, merry and in good health, thank God. There is a kinsman of Chamberlain's wife in Calais, named Master Harryngton. Had liever than 20 nobles he had known it when Chamberlain was here. He has become surety for his servant, and advises Chamberlain to come to the sanctuary of Fremmyngam beside St. Thomas, 15 English miles out of Calais. He is willing to pay his costs to the extent of 40 crowns. Advises Chamberlain and Rogers to send him a letter of thanks with these words: "Cousin Harryngton, I desire you as unacquainted to help me now at my great need, and I shall deserve it to you and ever I come to my lands,"—adding that he will repay all he lays out on recovering his liberty. 177. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Writes to the King and to the councillors, who are still at Paris, in answer to their letter to himself and Morette, who, they thought, was still here. Hopes for news from France on Friday or Saturday. Thinks that the cartel should be well considered. The English have suspended theirs until they see the effect of Silvester's journey. Wolsey thinks that both should be delivered at once, and that we ought to shut our eyes to everything until the Princes are recovered; after which we can do marvels. He will show the Emperor that he does not carry his heart in his sleeve, and that he has gained nothing by his insults. He is in great trouble about their matter with the Pope. The bishop of Bath wrote that he sent letters from Doctor Stephen, but they were not found in the packet, which looked as if it had been opened. He says the packet passed through the hands of Montmorency and others. Assured him that Montmorency was not to blame. If he sees that he is being used in this way, matters will go terribly ill. He told me that Gregory Casale suspected the Pope would take the other side if the lanceknights came near him. News has come from Antwerp that he and the marquis of Mantua have secretly agreed with the Emperor; but lies are frequent in that quarter. Reminds him of what Gambara said in the winter, that if Francis did not grant the request of his Holiness, especially about Ravenna and Cervia, he would rather give himself up to his greatest enemy than not find a remedy; and that the marquis of Mantua would do what the Pope told him. He has now allowed men to be levied by his relations and in his country, for the enemy.

Reminds him also of the phrase in L'Alemand's letter, that great things would be seen in Italy this year. A descent of lanceknights is no such great affair. But if the Pope sees he cannot make good his pretensions to Ravenna and Cervia, Florence and Ferrara, when Francis remains master in Italy, I do not see how we ought to trust him. Cannot help thinking frequently of Gambara's words, which were "horriblement haultes." Pistoye would probably tone them down (rabaisser), who, as you know, is a good Imperialist.

You must make good cheer for the bishop of Bath, who has not spoilt matters, as you think. Wolsey says that you were somewhat more offended when the articles of peace were debated than he should have expected, considering the trust he has in you. It is necessary to show these people open friendship and trust, and then you will find the Legate such as you wish.

Complains of not receiving any money, and of the increase of his expences. Reminds Montmorency of his promise to recommend him if anything became vacant. London, 10 June.

I have been waiting for Wolsey's letters about Silvester. Tonight he sent a man express to know what had become of Stephen's letter. I think I have removed all suspicions of you. Since this morning till now, 2 a.m., we have been disputing with lady Margaret's ambassadors at Hampton Court, and have agreed upon the form sent by Morette, with a slight exception. Wolsey has worked very hard. There is also some specification of a truce at sea, to hold good this side of Spain. Thus we can attack the Spaniards in their ports, but they cannot attack us in ours. Tomorrow morning they go to London, and return by midday to sign. 10 June.

Opinion of Wolsey concerning the difficulty with the duke of Ferrara, and whether the capitulation of the Imperialists with the Pope should be divulged.

Advises Francis to keep on good terms both with the Pope and the duke of Ferrara, as the friendship of the latter may be of great service in Italy, and that, if the Emperor cannot be brought to reason otherwise, the disgraceful capitulation made by him with the Pope should be published in Spain.

22 June. 179. DU BELLAY to the CHANCELLOR, ARCHBISHOP OF BOURGES and FIRST PRESIDENT.

MS. 5,499, f. 68. Bibl. Nat.

Believes they will have received full satisfaction on the points contained in their letter by the arrival of Morette with Francis. The difficulty of the English about the article of the intercourse is owing to some dispute with the Flemings; on which the writer speaks at much length. Observations on some of the other articles, and the fact of Gueldres not being comprehended. Has not mentioned hitherto his suspicion that the secretaries would break off and go away. Was not sure of it till today, when he was informed by Wolsey of an intimation he had received from a gentleman whom the King keeps secretly in the court of the lady Margaret, that she alone is for the truce, and that all the Council is opposed to it. The arrival of Du Ru and your forces in Italy, and the fact that those on this side have sent home their men, are additional encouragements to the war party. Has made representations to Wolsey about the style in which the Chancellor should be mentioned. He consents, since you attach so much importance to it. What moved him to the contrary was the great desire he and Montmorency both have that everything said in the name of the two Kings should appear to be in perfect conformity, and should seem to the world to indicate not a mere fraternity, but one spirit. Assures the Chancellor he himself has not been officious in the matter. Wolsey is much gratified with the news from Naples. London, 22 June.

180. DU BELLAY and MORETTE to FRANCIS I.

Was with Wolsey eight days ago at Hampton Court. Communicated to him Francis' letter of the 14th, with which he was greatly pleased, seeing the great confidence you repose in him. He gave them at one time to his secretary to take to the King, but withdrew them immediately on account of an article referring to the obligation you demanded for the contribution granted to you.

I wished, however, to send him the copies of your letters to the Pope about the King's affair, and to Monseigneur Dauranches (prince of Orange) about the matter of Ravenna and Cervia,* which gave him very great satisfaction; but as to the bond you ask for, of which I showed him the draft, he said he could not believe such a thing was proposed with your assent, considering the great expressions of confidence you had used to the bishop of Bath, and the letters Madame had written him; and for his own part he would rather have suffered a great loss than that such a thing should have come to the knowledge of his master after all his efforts to preserve unity between you.

He hoped that Francis would give his entire confidence to him, and dwelt very long upon this subject,—of which Du Bellay has already written frequently; besides that, he spoke to very much the same effect when Morette was here. In the end he said that if you insisted on so strict a bond, you could not refuse one on your side. He knows well his master will not refuse it, but wishes you to consider the consequences well beforehand, and said that if England had wished, they could have found plenty of excuses before granting the contribution. In short, that if you continued in this fashion, you would prejudice your interests with the King, your good brother, beyond recovery. Endeavored to show that Francis had no distrust of Wolsey or the King, and avoided for the time insisting on the obligation. In the middle of their conversation news came that five or six of Wolsey's household had taken the sweat, and their interview was broken off. Gave Wolsey the copy of the letters of the Emperor to the president Calvimont; which he was very glad of, hoping that if your cartel is delivered to him (Calvimont?) he cannot take it without a special charge (sinon en autre charge), which will obviate the danger of frustrating the negotiations for peace already begun, and of which Wolsey says he has great hopes from letters received today from the bishop of Worcester, stating that the Emperor was expecting two persons from England and Flanders. Has been waiting for news from Francis to give him an opportunity of returning to Wolsey to see if he could not come back upon the subject of the obligation; not that he thinks it expedient in the interest of Francis, but in order to fulfil his commands; but not having this opportunity, has thought it unadvisable to delay this despatch.

Has been protesting for six months that he lives under a burden, and has no means of getting on.

181. FRANCIS I. to DU BELLAY.

Has seen by his letters to the Grand Master what he has been able to do to set things right about the truce. As nothing more can be done, it remains to see that each party observe it strictly. Guillaume des Barres, secretary of the lady Margaret, came to him at Paris with the ratification of his mistress. Despatched him again in the company of La Chargerye (Hargerie), by whom Francis has sent his own ratification, and the release of the goods of the Emperor's subjects in France. Has also despatched one of his valets de chambre to the duke of Gueldres, whom he is resolved not to abandon. Sends a copy of an intercepted letter of the prince of Orange to show the King and Wolsey the extremity to which the Imperialists are reduced in Naples. By a letter of Lautrec of the 20th ult., wine and meat had failed them, and they were reduced to such necessity that Lautrec hoped in a few days to be able to return and chase back from Lombardy the succours which had arrived there. These latter have not done much, but have allowed St. Pôl to assemble his forces, both Swiss and lanceknights and foot of the dukedom of Milan. Has every hope of his success. The expences of Francis, however, are so great, that he wishes Henry would immediately send him the contribution of Italy as agreed to by Morette and Du Bellay; but Du Bellay must not press this in such a way as to show distrust. You will have seen what I lately wrote to the Pope with my own hand, by the copy which I sent you, and the instructions which I gave to the viscount of Turenne in going to his Holiness for the despatch of Dr. Stephen and the other ambassadors of my good brother. And although cardinal [Campeggio] has been dispatched by his Holiness to come hither, to whom Francis has commanded the seigneur de Barbezieulx, the captain general of his navy, to offer a number of galleys for his passage, yet, having seen some discussions touching this affair by intercepted letters of the envoy of the prince of Orange with the Pope, he has thought it best to send the original to be shown to Wolsey. Has received his letters of the 30th ult., of the difficulties which have been made about the obligation sent to him, the negotiations for the truce, the contribution of Italy, &c. And although they ought not to take suspicion now about what they did not refuse to the bishop of Tarbes, viz., about the [pay for the] first months which they agreed to at Amiens for Lautrec, nevertheless Du Bellay is to say that Francis relies so entirely upon their promise, that he requires no other obligation than what they will see reasonable; and, without pressing them too far, Du Bellay may show them the note sent herewith, showing that the sum of ——— is still required after deducting what Francis ought to contribute for the term of May. Is to remind Wolsey that he had promised that Francis might always have recourse to him, and trusts that he will bring these pecuniary discussions to a happy conclusion, as the success of their common enterprises depends on it. R. O. Received on the 9th July, by a servant of his cousin, Sir Thomas Clifford, his letter, dated at Hertford Castle, 26 June. [See No. 4419.] When the King appointed my lord of Cumberland warden of the West Marches, my Lord my father made over to him the lands in question, being but 32 acres, lovingly and kindly, with his other offices held of the King. He had the letting of them for full two years while he was officer; but since his own appointment Dacre has let them this year to tenants, who have sown them with corn, now growing. Hopes that his tenants will not be molested. There are but three meadows belonging to the demesnes of Carlisle, of which Cumberland has occupied two, and Dacre the other. Naward, 18 July.

185. [DU BELLAY to ———.]
MS. 5,499, f. 28. Bibl. Nat. It is more than a month since you had letters from your good brother, desiring me to urge Wolsey to find means to get the article of the truce reformed by Madame Margaret, in which mention is made of the goods of your mother. It has not been my fault that I have not obtained it sooner; but at the time a plague had suddenly broken out, called the sweat, which reduced Wolsey to such extremity that he withdrew into a corner of his great house, not knowing whither to go; and only four men in his house remained well. For a long time he remained doing nothing but what men are accustomed to do in hourly expectation of death. I sent to him more than ten times to no purpose, and when things began to look better, I fell ill myself; so that I have been obliged to wait 15 days before I could have access to him, even on the King's business. I then obtained the despatch which I send, addressed to the English ambassador for greater security. If matters are not passed as much to the advantage of your house as you would like, no one regrets it more than I. Nothing was more vigorously debated, and I could do no more. Might have succeeded better in defending myself if I had had the treaty of Madrid which I have so often asked for, but things were conducted in such a fashion that the Flemings had the better of us in the matter of Gueldres and others. I believe your brother will tell you the cause. The Flemings saw clearly that neither we nor the English could make war upon them, owing to our delays. Have done the very utmost for the King and Madame. I went even the length of protesting that I would leave without being quit of my charge; but I have not been in a position to do anything. I fear much that the best security for my congé at present lies either in the conclusion of peace, or in some dissatisfaction that I may have given. The envoy they have sent to the Emperor will have been heard on St. James's day at Valladolid. He is a good and honorable personage, and if the Emperor remain obstinate I think the English will not abandon us. I beg you not to be dissatisfied, you being in Paradise, if my news be old before reaching you.

You may have information by your brother of everything. It is true that you have been at court some time, but I was only informed of it after your departure.

28 July. 186. DU BELLAY to FRANCIS I.
MS. 5,499, f. 78. Bibl. Nat. Since he wrote on the 16th went ten days ago to Wolsey to have an answer about the advance demanded by Francis for the contribution. Has waited till now, and has at last been paid a sum of 30,000 cr., which he sent over at once, as the Grand Master wished all diligence to be used. Forwards his receipt, and asks the King to send a quittance, when Wolsey will send him in return a quittance of what is due of Henry's pension and his own.

The day for commencing the contribution is not yet decided.

Has not yet been able to come to any agreement about the duke of Gueldres, as Wolsey says that he will send to his master to know his intention. If the matter is concluded as Francis wishes, thinks there will be some delay. Wolsey told me that the Duke had lost Vorth, and suggested that he should surrender the lands of the Bishop now in his possession, and thus enter the truce, as the feeling against him is very strong, and his enemies would spare nothing, which would cause Francis great expence, without much profit to the Duke.

Wolsey is vexed that Francis has not sent the ratification and Du Bellay's power; not that he distrusts the King, but that the people here may not think that he is careless about his master's affairs.

Said it was only forgetfulness,—which he took in good part; but Du Bellay wishes that they had been sent already, for carefulness in these little things will make the King think that Francis esteems his friendship.

Wolsey thanks Francis for his anxiety for his and the King's health. The plague is abating. He was glad to hear the news in Francis' letters of . . . and has communicated them to the King. He hopes the lanceknights will make a last effort in Lombardy, that they may not be reproached with retreating without doing anything.

About one thing he complains bitterly, that when the English gentleman who was sent in May to Spain fell ill at Bourdeaux, and forwarded to Bayonne his charge for the English ambassadors in Spain, and the memoranda for Silvester's safe-conduct, there was so much delay that the English merchants have suffered great loss. He is much surprised that while they are sparing nothing to assist the French, the latter should make their expenditure of no effect; and that if by underhand means persons sent by common consent are stopped, it will be a waste of time to meddle any more.

Advises Francis to let him know that it was not done with his knowledge, and that he is vexed at it. Wolsey says he has heard that the Emperor would return to Valladolid on St. James's day, which he had appointed for giving audience to Silvester; and also that he had made the lords of Spain take an oath to his son as if he meant to go to Flanders. If he does this Wolsey says that he will never go back to Spain.

He was pleased that the Emperor had a daughter, as there might be means of making an alliance with France.

Said this was not the first time Wolsey had made fun of him, but he would take it patiently. He was pleased with this answer. Has always used similar language to the King. London, 28 July.

187. Du Bellay to Montmorency.

Did not go to Wolsey so soon as he wrote that he would, but waited two days after writing a letter to Vannes, which he expected Wolsey would see and lay before the King, and thus shorten the matter of the contribution. You will see the issue. I do not send the whole sum, because I have delivered part for you, and have retained 500,000 cr. Begs that he himself be paid as promptly as possible, for his credit is exhausted. You will see there is some loss on the value of the money, the angelot being only 67 sous 6 deniers, and the crown of the sun only 40 sous 6 deniers.

As to the day the contribution is to commence, Morette and I have been deceived. I thought for certain it would have been June 1st, and I knew Wolsey was persuaded of it; but since he has received answer from Francis he is fixed on having it the middle of June. Never had so much trouble to gain a point. Showed him memoranda that I had written in his presence and by his command, but he disavowed them all. I said to him with humility some bitter and piquant things that I would rather have been in [purgatory]* than have said by command, but as they only came of myself they could do no harm;—besides, I have always been his great favorite, and he would not let me return but with a promise to visit him shortly and hunt. Finally we came to consider that we were both very good fellows.† But he made me this offer, that it should be put to the honor of Morette; and if he affirmed as a gentleman that it was as I said, he would pay the remainder, not out of the King his master's money, as regards whom the matter was settled, but out of his own purse; but he was sure Morette was too honest to deny that the commencement should be on the day the treaty was concluded.

You will know what this means.

Returned to the charge, and had a long discussion, asking Wolsey what assurance he could give to Francis for the future, if he showed himself so unreasonable about a pitiful 16,000 cr.

In the end Du Bellay was victorious, refusing to deliver a receipt for the money except in a lump.

You will consider what is to be done about the commencement of the contribution. I think it will be better to give him the reins (luy en mettre la corde sur le col), and let me put everything in his discretion. Begs Montmorency to see to an abbey in Picardy given to Du Bellay by the King, which is falling under bad rule.

Wolsey is vexed at the delay in sending the ratification and Du Bellay's power, also at the detention of the letters at Bayonne. Has assured him that the culprits shall be hanged, or, if gentlemen, beheaded.

There is so little security in this country against robbers, that I have sent the bearer, the prothonotary De la Chappelle, with the money, who will sooner be killed than lose anything.

Sent him escorted to the seaside by trusty harquebuses, and got a ship of Boulogne to convey him.

Wolsey has news from Spain that Du Rieu was ready to embark, when the Imperialist ambassador here notified to him that truce was being negotiated; and as soon as it was settled, he turned to Naples. Nevertheless, his power is not great, but your navy had better be on the watch.

5 Aug. 190. Du Bellay to Montmorency.

Colbert MS. 468, f. 656. Bibl. Nat.

Received on Sunday his letter by La Chapelle. Sent immediately to Wolsey, who was with the King at Windsor, his packets and the news of the retreat of the lanceknights, desiring him to fix a day to bring him the ratification, and discuss other matters; which cannot be till Thursday or Friday, on his return to Hampton Court. Nevertheless, I despatched this packet that you may send me the power which I had to conclude the truce, for which I have so frequently written; for the Flemings wanted to have the power I had, and Wolsey was content to wait for that which has been so often promised.

Wolsey's intention was, as I have written, that Francis should send a quittance for what he has received. You have sent me a power to give one, which comes to the same thing; but you know how particular they are here about ceremonies, and they may be a little dissatisfied. You may say you ought not to give a full quittance unless they give you one for the pensions. I have not said this, however, to Wolsey, for fear of showing distrust.

Madame Margaret makes great complaint to Wolsey about Gueldres, who has refused the truce. She cannot believe that Francis will break his faith by assisting him with money. As De Vaux will have informed you, the ambassadors of Hungary have left. Rincon will tell you their success as regards ready money for the succour of the Vaiwode. The English show themselves a little cold, but intend to send thither. They intended to send a bishop; but Russell is likely to be the man, and he will be better than any other whose name is not Wallop. I think when you have heard the ambassadors, you will see that God has given you a great opportunity to humble your enemy for ever. I am sure their proposals will please you. I have suggested all the doubts I could think of, and they have completely satisfied me. If they be not ready to pass from here to Denmark in Sept. or the beginning of Oct., their passage will be dangerous, perhaps impossible.

Whoever you send, Dr. Gervais will be a good second. Suggestions about giving money to the Venetians in connection with this matter. Wolsey begs that you will use diligence in the despatch of these ambassadors. The English intend that if the peace do not come before November the contribution should only be pro rata.

it might be as well "qu'il s'en saisit quelque chose." The King has been more displeased than he has shown himself, on hearing by "Vuyenne de Casal" that Barbesieux has refused two galleys to convey Campeggio. I have contradicted it as far as I could. Wolsey has been very glad that Montfort has been well received. And he has not been illpleased with your hypocrisy, for I believe the opinion of the King's malady has kept the Emperor hitherto obstinate.

La Chapelle is here. He has brought the bishop of Transylvania, a learned man, of credit with the king of Hungary. There could not be a better opportunity of giving the house of Burgundy a beating which they will feel for ever. True, it is a bad time for spending, but the occasion is great, for it is not only a question of making a king of the Romans, but of not leaving a foot of land there to these gentle rulers of the world, as you will understand when the English ambassadors are despatched in a few days. The bearer will tell you what we have done about Gueldres.

Has received his letter of 30 July, showing the satisfaction expressed by Wolsey at the confidence Francis reposes in him in the matter of the contribution, wherein he trusts entirely to his word of honor, regarding him as his most trusty friend.

Not only he and Madame but all their subjects are bound to him. Will not attempt to excuse himself from the suspicion Wolsey has expressed about him, but assures Du Bellay he has never said a word about Wolsey with which Wolsey has any occasion to be dissatisfied. Thinks it must have arisen from those who are illpleased at the gratitude felt towards him by Francis and Madame, on account of his good services in the interest of the two Kings; but Wolsey ought to disregard such insinuations. Has always spoken most affectionately about Wolsey to the bishop of Bath. Cannot explain about the packets of letters, of which also Wolsey complains, as he has neither seen nor heard anything of them; nor did the bishop of Bath perceive that there was anything wrong, or that any one of them had been opened. Francis has not been in better health these 10 years. You may show my other letter, if you think fit, to Wolsey, that he may have no more groundless suspicions of me. I write to him only a little letter of credence for you, but I beg you to let me know his answer. Obtain as soon as you can the remainder of the contribution, to help to support the great expences we have had in Italy and elsewhere, especially since Wolsey was here. 21 Aug. 196. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Colbert MS. 468, p. 483. Bibl. Nat.

The King is sending Mr. Bryant to enquire how Francis I. is, and thank him for his good remembrance of him. He has also charge of two other matters, one of which was explained to me by Wolsey, and the other I have heard elsewhere. First, as to Andrea Doria, concerning whom they entertain great apprehension that God will punish you and them also, and that things will be thrown into disorder after having been brought to the point with so great expence and danger. I have defended Francis in this matter according to what you said about it to De Vaux. Wolsey says that the Pope is sending to Doria, Sanga and Gregory de Casal to satisfy his demands; and although the Pope had offered Doria two galleys, and wished Lautrec to assure him of your paying the remainder, nothing has been done; but he has made an agreement with Du Reu, ratified by the Emperor, and was to revictual Naples in 15 days, and withdraw the sea from subjection to Francis. He has already sent back the Marquis du Guast to Lombardy; of the rest Bryant will inform you, who leaves tonight. Wolsey says, if Doria cannot be brought back your enterprise will turn to nothing. Reports a conversation with Wolsey about Doria's demand of Savona.

Wolsey said it would have been far better to have paid Doria well, and lost six Savonas to the Emperor, than to have lost time at such a juncture; nevertheless, Savona will be lost.

This conversation took place yesterday; for, as I wrote on the 19th, I went to Wolsey with the ratification, with which he was well satisfied, awaiting only my power; for the non-arrival of which I took the blame upon myself, saying I had not explained the matter to you clearly. He forgave me, and was satisfied with you. About the quittance I will write to you, and give the Chancellor an answer, for there is no hurry about it, and the courier, who is going to Dr. Stephen, starts immediately. As to Gueldres, when Silvester's answer arrives, which is daily expected, if it be of peace, you have nothing (vous n'avez rien); if of war, you may have something (vouz en pourrez avoir). I am not without hope of the advance of the contribution.

On showing Wolsey the letters which I had from Morlot, I made him note one word about the ill will of the Pope. He said there could be no doubt of it, but he must own the Pope was wronged in not having Ravenna and Cervia restored to him. I excused Francis in the matter, but I see he is not quite satisfied, and thinks the two places should be restored.

You are a great favourite of Wolsey's, and he has more fear at this moment of your being dissatisfied with him than otherwise. He wished Bryant to see your letter that he might reply to you by him; in short, he regards you as a brother, and as a most trusty and diligent servant to your master. He says both you and he are angry when anything touches the honor of your masters, which makes him love you the better; and being the elder, he advises you to do as he has done with me, that is, when he has been very angry and annoyed, to make it up again as soon as possible.

198. DU BELLAY to FRANCIS I.

Was with Wolsey on Sunday, and showed him the contents of your letter of the 20th ult., along with the article about the commission I had; by which, and the copy of the treaty, it was evident that they had no grounds to take exception. Wolsey, on considering it well, took it in good part, seeing that it did not concern their affairs, although he had formerly had occasion to think otherwise; for Hargerie had agreed that a delegate should be sent from England to Cambray to settle any difficulties which might arise about the truce; and as I had already written to the Grand Master, Master More was appointed to go.

Since the affair has been better understood, More has explained it to the said ambassador, and his mission is broken off. Wolsey begs you not to be offended at his having spoken rather warmly upon the subject. He strongly approves of the despatch of Morette; still he is very anxious that Andrea Doria should be brought back, if possible, as by his aid you would have infallible victory at Naples, but it will be the most serious damage to your affairs if he be an enemy. He thinks your army of Normandy a waste of money, and that it will arrive too late at Naples. I have pressed him again for the contribution. I think if the matter had been mentioned in my letters it would have been more advanced, but he has promised to communicate with the King about it.

Wrote to Thade about Wolsey's intending to send More to Cambray. Has since received a despatch of the 20th ult., by which and by the information of the treaty given by La Hargerie it appears that this is unnecessary. Wolsey has informed me of the arrival of Dr. Stephen and of the coming of Campeggio. He afterwards spoke of Andrea Doria, insisting upon the absolute necessity of regaining him, as he had done before the departure of Bryant. He also spoke of the good intention of the Pope, and of the ill-usage he had received in the matter of Ravenna and Cervia. He said the Pope was very well pleased with the viscount of Thuraine. He appeared dissatisfied that so much distrust was shown of the Pope. I answered sometimes rudely that the Pope had given no reason to expect confidence in him, which he admitted, but he wished us to treat him with dexterity. He was very glad De Vaulx had gone to him. We then came upon "ce camp (coup?) qu'apporte le hérault de l'Empereur," which he said he understood to be founded on this combat, which troubles him terribly, as it will put an end to the practices of peace. He acknowledges, however, that Francis could not have done otherwise than he has done. He wished the Pope, the King his master, the lady Margaret, and everybody would interfere. They say here signor Hercules is making some arrangement (prenne quelqu'estat) with the Florentines. Perhaps I shall get the thing deferred for fear of the suspicions it may create in the Pope. I believe you know that their ambassador who was here is going. I believe he (Wolsey ?) is trying by every means to break off this enterprise. He has learned that the Emperor did not come, as he promised, to Valladolid, and therefore does not expect an answer from Silvester so soon, since it has been necessary to go to Madrid. He wishes Madame and you would do everything to break off this combat. Suggests that the Emperor, being informed of the state of Germany, would like to come to the Low Countries, and if he assign the camp at Cambray he would get you to assure his passage by sea; but if he were to ask England also to assure his passage, Henry would refuse it, and thus the combat would be broken off.

Beaurain has arrived with 2,000 Spaniards in Flanders, it is supposed to revenge on Gueldres the death of the Flemings, who have been so well beaten. Du Reu when he left Spain was not informed of the truce. He (Wolsey ?) is already anxious to know if the Hungarian ambassadors are despatched.

200. Du Bellay to Du Prat.

According to your letters of the 9th ult., on the return of the prothonotary De la Chappelle I presented to Wolsey the power you sent me, which he read in my presence. He paused at the words sur innovations without saying a word. Has written more fully to the King and the Grand Master. Wolsey says we are wrong in thinking they are endeavoring by indirect means to renew the obligation of the offensive treaty; but I think if next year you would engage once more to make war in Flanders, either by virtue of the obligation or otherwise, you will not find them the most diligent in the world, for they don't mean to be at much expence. They were fully persuaded that peace would take place, and that therefore matters would never come to those terms.

As to your desire to know what they intend in order that Francis may provide for it, I think it would be well to look to it early without giving the English any ground of suspicion; but if Naples be brought into subjection, and a warlike reply come from the Emperor, I think you will have good occasion to negotiate with them for a joint enterprise in the spring. Last time I was with Wolsey I could do nothing before the quittance which he is to give me for last May; for Dr. Stephen arrived, to whom he had to give audience, and although it was his intention to have an acquittance from the King, yet when I showed him what you thought desirable, and that what was sent to me was of the same substance, he pretended to be satisfied, provided everything were ratified, with all the great ceremonies which you know are used here. 24 Sept. 203. DU BELLAY to FRANCIS I.
MS. 5,499, f. 88. Bibl. Nat.

On receiving yesterday your letters of . . . . I went to communicate them to Wolsey, who had already heard the contents from the bishop of Bath, but, notwithstanding, kept them to show the King, who, he thought, would be much pleased.

Wolsey was glad to see how the Emperor's herald had been despatched, for your honor was satisfied and the Emperor's hypocrisy manifested, and the practice for peace could not now be hindered. The bishop of Bath praised you for your conduct, and it is much approved of here. Wolsey says the unfavorable news from Naples made him ill when with the King four days ago; but as it is not your fault, but the hand of God, it must be borne patiently, and resolutely remedied, without showing the enemy that there is any discouragement felt. When I asked his advice, not only as your friend, but as one of your chief councillors, he said he had already conversed with his master about it; and if your army was routed, with the exception of what Renzo (le seigneur Cencé) may have with him and the troops in fortified places, it would be impossible to reconstruct an army, considering the distance, scarcity of provisions, and the present season; and he therefore advises you to reinforce the said fortified places, so that something may be done in the spring, and that you may thereby show the Emperor that you do not want good will, and thus bring him to reason, and may retain your allies; you should also reinforce St. Pôl in Lombardy.

Wolsey thinks it is necessary to assure ourselves of the Pope, and to regain Andrea Doria, for which he proposes two alternative methods. Spoke to him of the difficulty, and asked him if he had any information of which we were ignorant. He replied that Doria ought not to refuse our offers, because he had showed to Casale and others the trust he has in Wolsey, and had spoken to Dr. Stephen as if he felt regret at having abandoned you; besides, he would do more for the Pope than for any other. When I said that Doria could not abandon the Emperor so suddenly, he said a man who had committed one villany would easily commit another, and find plenty of opportunity and excuse. He would write to Casale about it, and communicate it to you by the English ambassador. As to securing the Pope, he says the only way is to get Ravenna and [Cervia] restored to him, and though you have done much towards that end, you must exert your authority still more, which the Venetians would not dare nor wish to resist, especially now that they fear the Emperor after the disasters in Naples. If they will not restore them to his Holiness they might surrender them to be held by you or the king of England. Will not mention all his reasons, as the ambassador Taylor (Laillier) will not go to sleep over it, but will show you the advantages to be derived from the above advice, as the Pope has great influence with Doria, and could also make use of an interdict or excommunication in case the Emperor refuse to accept the offer of peace, giving sureties to you for the performance of his promises, for which Wolsey is ready to give you his word.

He thanks you, in his master's name and his own, for your reception of Campeggio, who is waited for anxiously here.

Wolsey has ordered me to return in four or five days to settle the contribution, of which I will get as much as possible.

Campeggio will arrive tomorrow. The Legate will go to meet him as far as the house of the duke of Suffolk, and has intimated to me that he would like myself and the other ambassadors to be with him; which we will. I think the Emperor's ambassador will stop in the country, whither he has for some time withdrawn. They will set to work as soon as possible.

Both the King and Queen are coming to Greenwich today; but I do not think Mademoiselle De Boulan will yet leave her mother in Kent. It is incredible with what satisfaction they have heard the better news sent me on the 28th ult. They also agree with the opinion of Francis as to the conduct of affairs in Naples. Wolsey is writing by the bearer, Thade, to Gregory Casale, about the negociation which he wishes resumed with Andrea Doria, saying he considers the thing by no means hopeless. Noted in Wolsey's letters which Vannes read to him, the proposition to place Savona in Doria's hands, with great authority in the city of Genoa. Spoke of the suspicions the Pope entertains about him in connection with Ravenna and Cervia. He urged that the Emperor should be summoned to accept peace, after which Wolsey promised to do everything. He also spoke of Don Hercules, who, he thought, though he has taken his departure, should by some means be prevented leaving the kingdom until it be seen how things will go, so as to have the better assurance of his father, who is not to be trusted; and he does not think it well that his father has recalled him. Explained that he was so harassed by his neighbours that he required to be on his guard; for which reason the presence of his son was necessary to him. Wolsey, however, persisted in his opinion. Thinks his wishes should be complied with. Could get nothing done about the contribution till tonight, when Wolsey begged him to have patience still for three or four days, on account of the multitude of affairs in which he is involved. In truth he has been for ten days wonderfully burdened. The King came to him from Hampton Court to Richmond every morning, and did not leave the Council till the evening. Wolsey at present cannot move day or night, what with bishops, doctors, and others. Bryan has made very good report of the treatment he has received in France. He tells me Montpezat will be here shortly. Has no time to write to Francis, as he has just heard of the bearer's departure. There is great trouble in Scotland. 209. MONTMORENCY to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

I have shown your letter of the 16th to the King, who is pleased with your diligence in sending news. You have received the packets from Spain and Italy, addressed to the Legate and the bishop of Bath. If they send you any more coming from England, I beg you to present them, and find out what you can of the contents. There is no more news of St. Pôl, and Francis has sent to him Francisque with a promise to reinforce him to the extent of 10,000 men, for the enterprise of Milan or Genoa. He has also sent to hasten Barbezieulx, who is now at Marseilles, about to embark with his fleet for Savona ("tirant le plus droict qu'il pourra la volfe (sic) de Savonne"). Have heard of the death of the constable of Castile, which Francis regrets on account of the service he was doing to the children. There has been a great mistake in this last truce in not having comprised Gueldres. Francis is very greatly annoyed at it, on account of the relationship and old friendship between them. Nothing but the assurances given him by Wolsey that no inconvenience should arise from it, could have induced Francis to accept the truce without comprehending him; and you must represent this to Wolsey as skilfully as you can, that he may not be compelled another time to do anything so disagreeable. You are to press the

212. DU BELLAY to FRANCIS I.

On Saturday Wolsey stole a little leisure to read over word by word your letters of the 20th ult., finding in them matters of great importance, quite in agreement with what he had heard from Spain, especially as regards the universal peace and the deliverance of your children. He afterwards showed me the decipher of the reply made by the Emperor to Silvester (No. 4787)* touching the said peace, by which it appeared that he declined the services of England as mediator, and that there was no reliance in him, either for the obligations into which you were to enter, or for the hostages who are to be received, the King and he being at enmity. His objections to Silvester as having no commission also show his disposition. I said if the king of England, in order to make new overtures, intended still to treat with him as a friend and mediator, he would show in effect how greatly he desired the peace of Christendom, and how ready he was to stretch a point for the Emperor's sake. On this Wolsey proceeded to recount at considerable length what he thought should be done in the matter. As to the information which came to you through Salviati, he thinks universal peace so important that no good means should be refused, and agrees to the Pope being the medium, if you think it expedient, in which case England will send powers to that effect. The means proposed by the Emperor, however, ought not to be neglected, so as to leave him no excuse for enmity.

He proceeded to give reasons why this should not prejudice Francis' interests. He is very glad of the article in your letters in which you promise to reprove the Venetians for their dishonest detention of Ravenna and Cervia.

I must not omit to tell you the good office done by Wolsey on hearing that the general of the Cordeliers, lately made cardinal,† had brought from Spain the conclusion made by him between the Pope and the Emperor. He immediately despatched a courier to Sir Gregory Casale, directing him to see the Pope; and, without blaming but rather praising the agreement he had made with the Emperor, if it be such as was reported, viz., that the Pope should remain neutral, to express a hope that there was nothing in the treaty which could be to the disadvantage of England and France,—powers so closely allied, and so devoted to his Holiness; otherwise the effect would be to alienate entirely the Venetians, and leave them for ever in possession of Ravenna and Cervia, and the duke of Ferrara in that of Reggio and Modena. Gives Wolsey's arguments in favor of using the Pope as a means of peace, adding his own opinion on the subject, and reasons why Francis should make no difficulty, even about the retreat of St. Pôl, the Emperor's army in Lombardy being so weak. If St. Pôl were kept in Dauphiné, as if to guard the country until the restitution of the children, it would give great strength to the allies of France, and keep Genoa in even better surety.

[18 Nov.] 214. CLEMENT VII. to WOLSEY.*

Ant. Bosius, a knight of St. John, who has returned from Portugal and Spain along with Philip Villiers Lile Adam, has reported to the Pope his conferences with the King and Wolsey. Is rejoiced at the honor they showed to him, and the liberal aid promised by the King and Wolsey to the holy expedition. Wolsey promised to get the King to write to the Emperor and the king of Portugal, on receipt of whose answer he would send one of the Order with the aid which he meant to send. Understands from Bosius that both these Princes have now sent answers, and each contributed a sum for the expedition. Urges the King and Wolsey to do the same without delay, as the danger in the East is very pressing. Commends Wolsey's conduct in restoring to the Order the property of the late prior, which had been withdrawn by certain persons.

Was with Wolsey on Friday last, when he set forth at length the credence contained in Rochepot's letters, and showed him his desire to do him service. Wolsey replied with an assurance of his friendship, and hoped he would inform him of anything that might occur likely to cause difficulty between the two Kings. On this arrived the merchants who are commissioned to receive the corn in France, complaining that they were hampered by a condition imposed by Francis, which was not in the treaty, viz., if there were found to be a sufficiency in France. On this subject he desired me to make remonstrances to you, saying he would rather have lost an arm than that there should be any failure in this promise. I said I did not wonder if, perhaps at the instance of Mons. de Vendôme and the other governors of the countries, some restriction had been made, owing to the scarcity which existed; but that I hoped that when you arrived at court Francis would do everything to give him satisfaction. Wolsey expressed himself pleased with this, and promised the merchants that they should send a man express to you, and that he would write to Francis and you in their favor. Thinks it of great importance that the people be not disappointed in this matter, otherwise Wolsey will be much annoyed. Reminds him of his request for a licence for 100 muids of his own, of which he will eat one part, and drink the other. I have told Wolsey, who promised to give orders about it. I am sure the Prothonotary will run no risk. He has an answer to your letters of the 1st: in which, as well as more recently by De Vaulx's nephew, I wrote of the urgent request the Legate made to have 30,000, 25,000, 20,000, or at least 15,000 cr. provided at Rome, if this company wanted it on their arrival. He das tried to assure himself of this, under color of the expedition of his bulls. Since I wrote, and especially since Messire Lacque left, he has spoken of it to me again so urgently, that I promised Francis would do it; or at least, if he could not provide it at Rome, he would at Lucca or Florence. If the thing cannot be done otherwise, orders should be sent at least to

223. DU BELLAY to FRANCIS I.

Yesterday the Legate sent for me to communicate his thoughts and projects since Brian's departure, and the last news he had from Rome about the common affairs. Of all this Bryan will have informed you. Hopes Francis will come to sure and prompt conclusions. Wolsey knows you will have heard by Silvester Darius a full account of his mission, as he was charged to address himself to you. You will thus have been informed of the estimation in which the Emperor is now held, of the contempt he shows for you and your allies, and of his ingratitude to the King your brother, all owing to a little prosperity, which has occurred to him undeserved. Wolsey will not undertake to admonish you, but hopes you are fully aware of the importance of abating his pride and recovering your children, by what means soever it can be done, either by a peace, if possible, or by vigorous war; but you should not found yourself so entirely upon the one alternative as to neglect the other; and he suggests a mode in which matters may be 20 Dec. 224. Du Bellay to Montmorency.

MS. 5,499, f. 124. Bibl. Nat.

Since his despatch of the 13th, has communicated to Wolsey at his request what he has set down in writing, and, wherever he could see any difficulty likely to arise, has set it forth. First, he set forth those mentioned in Montmorency's letter of the 13th, as if they had occurred to himself. Suggested, besides, that the restitution of Ravenna and Cervia,* and the appointment of the guard, would take a long time; and that even if the Venetians could be brought to do the one, the Emperor would have gained the greatest possible advantage in the meanwhile. This difficulty he answered by proposing that besides the commission given to Knight, one equally large should be delivered to the present bearer, addressed to the ambassadors now at Rome, to see to the affair with all possible diligence, and he entreats Francis to send a similar commission to his own ambassadors. By this means he calculates that before the middle of February the Pope will have signified the truce to all the Princes; which done and accepted, he will immediately convoke the assembly at Nice or Avignon; but if the Emperor refuse, it would be easy then to bring the Pope entirely over to the French interest, especially if Ravenna and Cervia were restored. There is little doubt, however, that the Emperor will be glad to accept the truce, seeing that he is not the assailant, but only wishes to defend himself. Suggested also a doubt whether the Pope would approve of these overtures, which Wolsey thought he certainly would, considering that he has offered to go in person to the Emperor to induce him to peace, and consequently he would be all the more ready to be a mediator, and gain the credit of having brought about a settlement.

Moreover, by this means he would gain all his ends. "Et la ou l'on oublierait qu'il en feroit difficulté ou pour ne laisser rien en danger ou pour ne voulloir faire despence a ce voiage," &c. (For the remainder see No. 5053.)

Is informed by his letters to Montmorency of the arrival and reception of Campeggio, and of the conversations Wolsey has had with Du Bellay about the recovery of Andrea Doria, and the means of securing the Pope. Is determined always to follow Wolsey's counsel, but in this matter of Doria sees very little hope. Has determined to despatch the bailly of Rouen to the Pope, in accordance with Wolsey's plan, for reasons which Du Bellay is to declare to him; viz., first, to thank him for granting a free passage through his dominion to those who have withdrawn from the army before Naples; secondly, to request him to persevere in favoring France; to remind him of what Francis has hitherto done in defence of his estates, and to assure him that he is still ready to do the like, provided the Pope will not favor the opposite party; and to inform him that he is writing to the Venetians, and has spoken to their ambassador to get them to give up Ravenna and Cervia, which he will compel them to do; and that he has sent express charge to the Florentines to give up to his Holiness his niece the little duchess (la petite duquesive) (sic). FRANCIS I. to DU BELLAY—cont.

Salviati and the General of the Cordeliers, lately made cardinal, as Francis wishes to do nothing without Henry, he has commissioned the bailly of Rouen to ascertain the conditions proposed. As to the war, St. Pôl's army having turned back, weakened by the capture of Pavia and the desertion of a band of Swiss, Francis has despatched 2,000 lanceknights to join him, who have already crossed the water, and has ordered him to raise 3,000 or 4,000 Italian harquebusiers, which will make 10,000 good men, besides those promised by the Venetians; by which means St. Pôl may endeavor to recover Genoa, which Francis is determined to attempt at all costs, and furnish it with men of a very different stamp from the peasants with whom Doria has hastily garrisoned it. To expedite the matter, has sent the sieur De Barbezieulx, who may set sail next week with 13 galleys and six or seven great barks, like La Grande Maistresse and La Branouse, of the late frère Be[r]nardin, and some other galleons conveying 1,500 or 2,000 men-of-war, in the hope of meeting Doria at sea. Thus Savona will be preserved in security. Says nothing in answer to the suggestions made to Du Bellay about retaining don Hercules, for he is already so far beyond the mountains that no good excuse could be found for recalling him.

Is confident no fault will be made in the matter of the contribution. Fontainebleau, 20 Dec.

Has received his letter of the 13th by the bearer. The King and Madame are very well satisfied with his report. Hopes to know his news since the despatch of the bearer by Dr. Trenit (Knight). Francis does not dislike the proposals of Wolsey, and thinks the Pope may be won over by good means. As to Ravenna and Cervia, you may be sure he will do his best. As to the coming of the bishop of Bath, you know what has been written already, and how well it will be taken here. L'Esleu Bayard has not yet returned. Although you have done all in your power to prevent the particular peace being made between the Emperor and England, before the general, it would seem by a letter of John Joachim which I send that the former is so advanced that it is likely to succeed. The King and Madame are extremely well satisfied with the "honnestes et bon propos que a tenuz monseigneur le Legat, De Briant fera grand diligence s'il est de retour devant que la confirmation en soit faicte." Sends Madame's answer to Du Bellay's long letter, that he may show it to Wolsey. A post has come from St. Pôl, telling of the death of Antony de Leva before Milan. An attempt by the prothonotary Gambara, who has charge of Piacenza, against the life of the duke of Ferrara, has been discovered. Sends news from Germany. La Chappelle was sent to you recently, and will have given you the news, but I write to tell you what has happened since he left. Our forces in Naples have been so reinforced, although Ranze has not joined them, that they have retaken ———, taken the Viceroy, and defeated a good number of Spaniards. Many important persons in the country have revolted, and taken our side against the enemy. Francis is sending the sieur Abat Vesin to reinforce the seigneur De Ranzec. News had come of the death of Andrea Doria, but it is untrue. The count de Feisque (?) and he have been at variance, but the Count is still outside Genoa. We have also news of the Emperor's preparations to go into Italy. Genoese bankers had begun to deliver money for the Emperor, but Francis had caused them to be arrested.

Viscount Thuraine has come from St. Pôl at Alessandria. St. Pôl had wished to go himself to Francis, and explain the state of matters. You may assure the English there is nothing in the report of a servant of Ferdinand having passed through France to the Emperor. You may also say what you have heard of William des Barres. Cleop. E. IV. 178. B. M.

A little before the receipt of your letter, I spoke with Mr. Gage at the court, and, as you commanded, moved him to speak to the duke of Norfolk for the burgess's room of the Parliament on your behalf, which he did. The Duke said he had spoken with the King, who was well contented that you should be a burgess, if you would follow the Duke's instructions. The Duke wishes to speak with you tomorrow, and has sent you as a token, by Mr. Gage, your ring with a turquoise, which I now send by the bearer. Will speak with Mr. Russhe tonight, and know whether you shall be burgess of Oxford, or not. If you are not elected there, I will desire Mr. Paulet to name you as burgess for one of my Lord's (Wolsey's) towns of his bishopric of Winchester. It would be well for you to speak with the duke of Norfolk as soon as possible tomorrow, to know the King's pleasure how you shall order yourself in the Parliament House. Your friends would have you to tarry with my Lord there as little as might be, for many considerations, as Mr. Gage will show you. Tomorrow night the King will be at York Place.

Divers of my Lord's servants, as Mr. Alvard, Mr. Sayntclere, Mr. Forest, Humfrey Lisle, Mr. Mores, and others, are sworn the King's servants. Mr. Gifford and I came together from the court, but when we came to London he departed I know not whither. He said he had no news. London, All Saints' Day, 4 p.m. Signed.

"Credence to be shown in our name, by our cousin the duke of Albany, till our brother and confederate the most Christian king of France."

1. [James] is much pleased with the French king's writing and credence, showing his intention to preserve the ancient friendship between the kingdoms. 2. Touching the credence shown by the captain of the Roket and Albany's secretary, Girard Byon, on behalf of the French king, he may say that after alliance and marriage with the queen of Hungary was proposed, James sent Sir John Campbell, of Lund, to Flanders, to inquire of her manners and "wesy hir persoun," and to assay how the marriage might be concluded, but without any commission to conclude it, until the King had taken counsel. Cannot, therefore, send persons to treat of what is mentioned in the credence. On Campbell's return will do nothing without consulting the French king, and will send ambassadors to him with instructions. 3. Notwithstanding his tender age, by which his realm has been in great trouble, receiving little help from friends, will not be induced without great cause to do anything to disturb the amity between Scotland and France.

Credence to be shown to our dearest uncle the king of England by David Wood. 1. Recommendations and inquiries after his health. 2. To complain of the "skaithis" and "attemptates" made by Scotch rebels, aided by Englishmen, especially Master Lasans, captain of Norham, and Lyell Gray, master porter of Berwick, for which no redress can be obtained. 3. The maintenance of Scotch rebels by the English causes the borderers of both realms to believe that there is no firm peace or amity between him and his uncle, but that their misdeeds are authorized by Henry as an occasion for war. Desires this to be remedied. 4. Will keep all the things sent by Magnus for conservation of the amity without any dissimulation, although he perceives by the King's letter, since Magnus's departure, that there is "stark informacioun" made to the contrary. 5. Alliance and marriage has been proposed to him by the king of France, to which he has deferred answer till he has Henry's advice. Hears also from his ambassador in Flanders that a marriage with the queen of Hungary will be proposed to him. When the ambassador returns, will send information to Henry, and ask his advice.

240. HENRY VIII. to SIR NICHOLAS CAREW and SAMPSON.

By sundry letters from them has heard of their progress to the 29th ult. Has also received their letters from Mountargis, concerning the communication they had with the brother of Sir Gregory de Cassalis, who is coming hither from the Pope, and asking whether they should go in post, seeing the brevity of time before the last day appointed for ratification of the treaty of peace lately concluded between the Emperor and the French king. Thanks them for their diligence. It is expedient that all that concerns the ratification of the treaty of Cambray should be performed in due order, and within the time limited; and if it is necessary, in order to arrive there in time, they must leave their trains and travel in post. They must say nothing about the King's great cause of matrimony, except as specified in their instructions; that is, they are not to open the matter unless the Emperor breaks or enters with them therein. Otherwise he might think they were purposely sent to entreat him, and be rendered more intractable; and other inconvenients might also arise. If they keep themselves close touching that matter, the Emperor will be more greedy to enter into communication with them, and they must give him an opportunity of doing so. If they see in him any inclination to favor the King's purpose, they must move, use, and conduce the same to the most benefit. It would be well to remind him of the sundry "gratitudes" shown to him by the King; and to say, as of themselves, that it would be unwise to oppose the King in his just causes, for it would be neither honor nor profit to him to diminish the love between him and the King. Will give him 10*l.* fee till the matter be tried, and, rather than fail, for his life. The best gentleman in the King's house would be thankful for such a fee. 245. JOHN LORD AUDELEY.

R. O. i. Substance of lord Audeley's petition to the King. 1. He was ordered to pay for his restitution 6,500 marks, by yearly instalments of 250 marks, which he has paid to the extent of 4,500 marks. Hopes the King will be content to receive the rest at the rate of 100*l.* a year, as he has done with other of his subjects, although few or none have observed all their days of payment. 2. Lord Audley was solicited to become surety for Lawrence Bonvixi, in a bargain of silks, malveyseys, and English cloth, for which Bonvixi was to receive 2,000 marks of the King in ready money, and deliver the wares into the wardrobe. Lord Audley was content to bind certain lands for the performance of this bargain for a loan of 800*l.*, to be paid at the end of 15 years yet to come, being assured by the Council that not only the bargain was such as Bonvixi was sure to win by, but that they would find means soon to discharge Audley thereof, and put the signories of Venice, Florence, or Lucca in his place. Bonvixi did his best to perform the agreement, but was disappointed by various accidents, and is now dead; and lord Audley has since offered various merchants strangers, and sometimes Englishmen, as securities in his place, but cannot get them accepted. Begs the King will take payment of the 800*l.* loan by 100*l.* a year, or else by 250 marks of the lands bound for his restitution. 3. As lord Audley is indebted to others in 2,000*l.* or more, begs that the King will disburse to him that sum, and take it again in yearly payments of 500 marks upon security of his lands.

Gives the names of persons engaged in the following robberies; viz., at Egerton Hill, of one Bouger, of Hethford Mill, on the Thursday before Michaelmas last, and of Mason, at Evershot. Among the names are, Master Nuall; James Ferrer; Sir Richard, priest of Ramsham; Henry Colt, of Oxford, innholder; Parker, scholar of Oxford; and Henry, parish priest of Tower.

Cowds be content to goo with good felowes to take a bote (booty)?" Answered that if he knew the company sure he was content. Farrer then named himself, Parkyns, and Robert Paynter, with others, and so departed.

Afterwards at an ale at Ramsun, he asked Gregory if he had ever been at any such deed, which he denied, and Farrer said he had not either; but as Perkyns and the Paynter came up, they departed. iv. The deposition of Perkyns.

Went with Jas. Farror at his request to one Rype's house, who had accused him of being a thief. Farror came to him in Sir Thos. More's name. Went at his request to view Lawrens Hoper's house, and reported that it was folly to meddle with it, for the house was strong and a great dog there. Farror said they should have a good booty there, and the priest would go with them. As to the gelding, he says Giles More gave it to the priest, and that it was astray, and Sir Thos. More gave it to him. When Farrer broke this to him, he asked him whether he would take such part in robbing Laurence Hoper as he, Sir Thos. More, and Robt. Gardyner would.

Mem.—For commandment to be given to the marshall of the King's Bench for taking Richard Worley and Thos. Bryghte.

James Farrour confesses his going to Rype's house with Perkens, and accusing the Paynter of speaking against him at Dorchester.

Mr. More commanded him to find out whether the Painter, the priest, and Perkyns had done any robberies, as he thought them suspicious persons. He discovered nothing, but they were content to go about a robbery which he proposed to them. With this Mr. More was content.——* He says Mr. More never moved him to break with the said persons, nor feel them; but it came only of his own mind to encourage them to rob Hooper.

1. Their discourse with cardinal Farnese, which is contained in previous letters.

2. Their visit to the Pope, who acknowledged the King's merits to him and the See Apostolic; declared the requests which have been made to him since the beginning of the cause by the King's orators; and excused both what he granted and refused, saying that the importunity of the ambassadors caused him to grant what should not have been granted, and sometimes he withstood their importunity, and refused to do what was required.

3. Their answer to this, in which they blamed the Pope for dissembling with the King, and granting what he might not grant.

4. The Pope's excuse that all he did was to declare how much he trusted the King, and that he feared his threats. He confessed his fault, and said that he was never more desirous in his life of serving the King.

5. The ambassadors' opinion is that the Pope is desirous to accomplish the King's purpose, saying that he will be accounted most ungrateful if he does not do what learned and wise men may require of him.

12. The Emperor's resolution concerning the King's matter, that he was never more sorry for cause, and desired nothing more than a good end therein; if the Pope were not thought indifferent, there may be some good indifferent men found in an indifferent place to be judges, if the King cannot otherwise lose his scruple. Bodl. MSS. Credence for Dr. Bell, Windsor, 6 March 21 Hen. VIII.

Pocock, I. 284. ii. Warham to his commissary of the University of Oxford, and the masters.

Wonders he has had no answer to his frequent letters on the subject of the bishop of Lincoln and Dr. Bell's mission by the King to have the advice of the University on a certain question. It is strange that they should make any difficulty when the Universities of Paris and Cambridge have declared their minds. Seeing that mighty matters cannot be shortly determined by a great multitude, it would be advisable that they should appoint thirty persons to decide it. Writes in English, that there may be no mistake about his meaning. Knoll, 15 March.

iii. Warham to his Commissary and the Divines.

Complains of the wilfulness of the regents and non-regents in obstructing the decision of the question proposed by the King, and presuming to put conditions upon "you that be heads and rulers." Commands the doctors and bachelors of divinity to settle it among themselves, avoiding such frivolous delays, and to repute the opinion of the majority as that of the University, and send it sealed with the University seal to the King. Contradicts a slanderous report by Master Kington that Mr. Bedell had falsified the Archbishop's letters and seal, and desires that he be punished for the slander. Canterbury, 28 March.

iv. Henry VIII. to the Commissary, &c.

Thanks them for accomplishing his desire in an agreeable manner, distinguishing the effect of the good minds of the more part from the perversity of the rest. 30 June. 259. FR. PAULINUS TURCHIUS to [CROKE].

Croke must not be surprised that in such an important case many persons refuse to back up their opinions, or commit them to writing. The absence of the bishop [of Verona] is not without danger to Christendom. Will speak to him as Croke desires, if he comes. 30 June 1530. "Fr. [Sept.] 260. [HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.]

Vit. B. XIII. 168. B. M. Burnet, IV. 169.

Has deferred answering his letter, dated at Bonony, 7 Oct., delivered by Paul Casale. Could not neglect it after diligent examination. Does not condemn the Pope himself for his proceedings in the divorce, but for lending himself to the temerity and ignorance of his councillors. This is a great fault in Christ's vicar, to act so inconstantly and deceivably. Gives an account of the proceedings in the cause from the offering of a commission, in which the King shows that the Pope has acted with great inconsistency. Has been compelled to take the advice of every learned man, whose opinions differ widely "from that those few men of yours do show unto you," and utterly deny that the Pope has a right to dispense with what God and nature have forbidden. The Universities of Cambridge, Oxford, Paris, Orleans, Bourges, Angers, and Bologna are of one consent in this respect. Urges that the Pope's councillors diminish his apostolical authority. If the King were to obey the Pope's letters in that they affirm what he knows to be otherwise, would offend God and his conscience. His Holiness must pardon the plainness of this language. Has no intention of impugning his authority, unless he is compelled, and the course he takes is rather to confirm it.

[Sept.] 261. [GHINUCCI to HENRY VIII.]

R. O. Pocock,* II. 5.

Has at length obtained from the city of Sienna the opinion of Decius, signed by him and another learned doctor; also another opinion from another Siennese lawyer, the most learned after these two: so we have got all the famous lawyers of that city. Has also obtained two opinions of divines, which he has given to these English doctors; and his nephew writes that he has some hope of obtaining two others, but that the cardinal of Sienna, who is there, inspires them all with great terror.

I wrote to your Majesty before that I had obtained two opinions of a Spanish friar, Felix, who had written in favor of the Queen. I gave them an opinion of Friar John de Finario, likewise in her favor, to Friar Dionisius, who has written for your Majesty, to refute them, which he has begun to do. Gallatinus, as I wrote, had promised to write in your favor, but said he would not show what he had written unless the Pope ordered him. Afterwards he began to write, but was forced to discontinue, as he says, by a servant of Cardinal Ægidius. You will understand this from our common letters.——Since I wrote this he has come to me, saying he is threatened with death if he write, and he would like the Pope not only to order but to compel him. I persuaded him, however, to deny that he was writing, and go on, assuring him that your Majesty would write to the Pope in his behalf.

Bishop Hipolitus de Nobili, friar, excuses himself for not having written, owing to ill health, but promises to do so now that he has recovered.

Gives an account of an audience with the Pope, in which he remonstrated against the refusal of his Holiness to grant letters decretal, or commit the cause to England, remarking on an insinuation of the Pope that the divorce was not popular there, as an argument for the latter course. Had some discussion with him on the value of the opinion of the University of Paris. Reminded the Pope of his obligations to England at the time the Emperor was at war with his Holiness, of which the writer had good knowledge when he was in Spain, and said that his predecessors had not been so dilatory when they saw danger impending. Urged also that the Emperor either would not or could not oppose a General Council, if other princes were agreed to it, and if it took place it would be greatly to the prejudice of his authority, for during the last 200 years no Pope has continued Pope after a General Council.

Reports another interview with his Holiness upon a Sunday, when the Pope said he could with less scandal give the King a dispensation for two wives, than grant what the writer asked;—but not knowing how this would suit his Majesty, thought it better to stick to the point. The Pope, however, continued to speak of the King's having two wives, and found several difficulties, especially that the Emperor would never consent to it on account of the prejudice which would ensue to the Princess.* Replied, that he did not see why the Emperor was to be considered, if a way was lawfully opened for the King to have male issue, or that he would have any cause to complain. He might make the same complaint if the Queen died, and the King wanted a dispensation to marry within the prohibited degrees. This observation the Pope did not answer. From what he said about the Emperor, does not feel sure that he would grant such a dispensation, even if the King would be content with it.

Seeing his obstinacy, went to some of the cardinals, regretting the danger to which the Pope was exposing the Holy See; but even they appeared to be very little moved. They said, however, they would do what they could to influence the Pope; and so did Sanga. Had an interview also with Philip de Senis on the same subject.

262. [THE AMBASSADORS AT ROME to HENRY VIII.]

Think it right to tell the King why they did not execute the whole of their instructions. One point was, that if the Pope refused to grant a decretal to three bishops or a commission to the archbishop and clergy of Canterbury, they should draw up a protestation that justice was denied them, and present an appeal to a future General Council. Explain their reasons for not doing so, at least until they have fresh orders, which can be sent before anything new is done here. Pius II. and Julius II. issued bulls prohibiting such appeals; of which they send copies. The same consideration prevented them from going to the Cardinals to announce the letter of the nobles (No. 6513). Thought it prudent also not to allege the privilege of the kingdom of England when the Pope asked why they did not come to judgment before him, on account of the doubt which the doctors cast upon that privilege. State reasons also why they did not consult the doctors about the objection to the Pope on the score of legitimacy or simony, and whether a single cardinal could make a valid protest, seeing that several Popes had been illegitimate. Send copy of the bull of Julius against simony.

"Articles against Sir Gregory Casalis and his brethren, which shall be proved partly with their own letters, partly with the letters of divers other men of good and substantial credence;" viz., that Sir Gregory had divulged at Milan that the question concerned the King, which made the doctors afraid to meddle, and had delivered the King's book to his enemies, who wrote against it: that he had delivered an abstract of the arguments in the King's behalf to Vincent de Cremona, who caused the determination of Ferrara to be taken from Croke: that Paul de Casalis promised in his brother's name that the King should take no displeasure with the duke of Ferrara on that account: that John de Casalis gave Croke, on his first coming to Venice, a false index of St. Mark's library, that he might not find the epistle of Basil, and had exhorted Simonetus at Padua to suppress the subscriptions he had obtained.

1049. 28 Jan. Grants on French Roll to the duke of Norfolk, and to Will. Nudegate and Francis Sydney. The roll on which these grants are entered is docketed as of the years 17—21 Hen. VIII.; but memb. 1, on which the entries in question occur, is endorsed as of the 16th year,—perhaps erroneously, as another entry on that memb. (see No. 1465, for the Abbey of St. Hubert in Ardaine) is certainly of the 17th year.

CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

[IMPERIAL 8vo., cloth. Price 15*s.* each Volume or Part.]

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although "the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most "complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized world," and although "they are of the greatest value in a historical and constitutional "point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to the public, from the "want of proper Calendars and Indexes."

Acting upon the recommendations of the Committees of the House of Commons above referred to, he suggested to the Lords of the Treasury that to effect the object he had in view it would be necessary for him to employ a few persons fully qualified to perform the work which he contemplated.

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls :—

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

[ROYAL 8vo., half-bound. Price 10*s*. each Volume or Part.]

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an "uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published under His Majesty's "royal sanction, would be an undertaking honourable to His Majesty's reign, "and conducive to the advancement of historical and constitutional know-"ledge; that the House therefore humbly besought His Majesty, that He "would be graciously pleased to give such directions as His Majesty, in His "wisdom, might think fit, for the publication of a complete edition of the "ancient historians of this realm, and assured His Majesty that whatever "expense might be necessary for this purpose would be made good."

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury in 1857 a plan for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly. In selecting these works, it was considered right, in the first instance, to give preference to those of which the manuscripts were unique, or the materials of which would help to fill up blanks in English history for which no satisfactory and authentic information hitherto existed in any accessible form. One great object the Master of the Rolls had in view was to form a corpus historicum within reasonable limits, and which should be as complete as possible. In a subject of so vast a range, it was important that the historical student should be able to select such volumes as conformed with his own peculiar tastes and studies, and not be put to the expense of purchasing the whole collection; an inconvenience inseparable from any other plan than that which has been in this instance adopted.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. THE CHRONICLE OF ENGLAND, by JOHN CAPGRAVE. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

Capgrave was prior of Lynn, in Norfolk, and provincial of the order of the Friars Hermits of England shortly before the year 1464. His Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (being written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. CHRONICON MONASTERII DE ABINGDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

This Chronicle traces the history of the great Benedictine monastery of Abingdon in Berkshire, from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I., shortly after which period the present narrative was drawn up by an inmate of the establishment. The author had access to the title-deeds of the house; and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom. The work is printed for the first time.

3. LIVES OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduuardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

The first is a poem in Norman French, containing 4,686 lines, addressed to Alianor, Queen of Henry III., and probably written in the year 1245, on the occasion of the restoration of the church of Westminster. Nothing is known of the author. The second is an anonymous poem, containing 536 lines, written between the years 1440 and 1450, by command of Henry VI., to whom it is dedicated. It does not throw any new light on the reign of Edward the Confessor, but is valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time. The third, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written for Queen Edith, between the years 1066 and 1074, during the pressure of the suffering brought on the Saxons by the Norman conquest. It notices many facts not found in other writers, and some which differ considerably from the usual accounts.

4. MONUMENTA FRANCISCANA; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. BREWER, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.

This volume contains original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of Saint Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers connected with the foundation and diffusion of this great body. It has been the aim of the editor to collect whatever historical information could be found in this country, towards illustrating a period of the national history for which only scanty materials exist. None of these have been before printed.

5. FASCICULI ZIZANIORUM MAGISTRI JOHANNIS WYCLIF CUM TRITICO. Ascribed to THOMAS NETTER, of WALDEN, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work derives its principal value from being the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards. When written, the disputes of the school-men had been extended to the field of theology, and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries. Wycliff's little bundles of tares are not less metaphysical than theological, and the conflict between Nominalists and Realists rages side by side with the conflict between the different interpreters of Scripture. The work gives a good idea of the controversies at the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries.

6. THE BUIK OF THE CRONICLIS OF SCOTLAND; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece; by WILLIAM STEWART. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1858.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, and was written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends, and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." Strict accuracy of statement is not to be looked for in such a work as this; but the stories of the colonization of Spain, Ireland, and Scotland are interesting if not true; and the chronicle is valuable as a reflection of the manners, sentiments, and character of the age in which it was composed. The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this metrical version, and the student of language will find ample materials for comparison with the English dialects of the same period, and with modern lowland Scotch.

7. JOHANNIS CAPGRAVE LIBER DE ILLUSTRIBUS HENRICIS. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

This work is dedicated to Henry VI. of England, who appears to have been, in the author's estimation, the greatest of all the Henries. It is divided into three distinct parts, each having its own separate dedication. The first part relates only to the history of the Empire, and extends from the election of Henry I., the Fowler, to the end of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, and extends from the accession of Henry I. in the year 1100, to the year 1446, which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

Capgrave was born in 1393, in the reign of Richard II., and lived during the Wars of the Roses, for the history of which period his work is of some value.

8. HISTORIA MONASTERII S. AUGUSTINI CANTUARIENSIS, by THOMAS OF ELMHAM, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by CHARLES HARDWICK, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191. Prefixed is a chronology as far as 1418, which shows in outline what was to have been the character of the work when completed. The only copy known is in the possession of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The author was connected with Norfolk, and most probably with Elmham, whence he derived his name.

9. EULOGIUM (HISTORIARUM SIVE TEMPORIS): Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. HAYDON, Esq., B.A. 1858–1863.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of the Abbey of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, about the year 1367. A continuation, carrying the history of England down to the year 1413, was added in the former half of the fifteenth century by an author whose name is not known. The original Chronicle is divided into five books, and contains a history of the world generally, but more especially of England to the year 1366. The continuation extends the history down to the coronation of Henry V. The Eulogium itself is chiefly valuable as containing a history, by a contemporary, of the period between 1356 and 1366. The notices of events appear to have been written very soon after their occurrence. Among other interesting matter, the Chronicle contains a diary of the Poitiers campaign, evidently furnished by some person who accompanied the army of the Black Prince. The continuation of the Chronicle is also the work of a contemporary, and gives a very interesting account of the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. It is believed to be the earliest authority for the statement that the latter monarch died in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster.

10. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE SEVENTH: Bernardi Andreæ Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1858.

The contents of this volume are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies on which he was sent by Henry VII. to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in the year 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Other documents of interest in connexion with the period are given in an appendix.

11. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE FIFTH. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by CHARLES A. COLE, Esq. 1858.

This volume contains three treatises which more or less illustrate the history of the reign of Henry V., viz.: A Life by Robert Redman; a Metrical Chronicle by Thomas Elmham, prior of Lenton, a contemporary author; Versus Rhythmici, written apparently by a monk of Westminster Abbey, who was also a contemporary of Henry V. These works are printed for the first time.

12. MUNIMENTA GILDHALLÆ LONDONIENSIS; Liber Albus, Liber Custumarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I. Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Custumarum. Vol. III., Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859–1862.

The manuscript of the Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, a large folio volume, is preserved in the Record Room of the City of London. It gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and early part of the fifteenth centuries.

The Liber Custumarum was compiled probably by various hands in the early part of the fourteenth century during the reign of Edward II. The manuscript, a folio volume, is also preserved in the Record Room of the City of London, though some portion in its original state, borrowed from the City in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and never returned, forms part of the Cottonian MS. Claudius D. II. in the British Museum. It also gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the twelfth, thirteenth, and early part of the fourteenth centuries.

13. CHRONICA JOHANNIS DE OXENEDES. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa in England in the year 449, yet it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to the year 1292, where it ends abruptly. The history is particularly valuable for notices of events in the eastern portions of the kingdom, which are not to be elsewhere obtained, and some curious facts are mentioned relative to the floods in that part of England, which are confirmed in the Friesland Chronicle of Anthony Heinrich, pastor of the Island of Mohr.

14. A Collection of Political Poems and Songs relating to English History, from the Accession of Edward III. to the Reign of Henry VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1859–1861.

These Poems are perhaps the most interesting of all the historical writings of the period, though they cannot be relied on for accuracy of statement. They are various in character; some are upon religious subjects, some may be called satires, and some give no more than a court scandal; but as a whole they present a very fair picture of society, and of the relations of the different classes to one another. The period comprised is in itself interesting, and brings us, through the decline of the feudal system, to the beginning of our modern history. The songs in old English are of considerable value to the philologist.

15. The "Opus Tertium," "Opus Minus," &c., of Roger Bacon. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

This is the celebrated treatise—never before printed—so frequently referred to by the great philosopher in his works. It contains the fullest details we possess of the life and labours of Roger Bacon: also a fragment by the same author, supposed to be unique, the "Compendium Studii Theologiæ."

16. Bartholomæi de Cotton, Monachi Norwicensis, Historia Anglicana; 449–1298: necnon ejusdem Liber de Archiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.

The author, a monk of Norwich, has here given us a Chronicle of England from the arrival of the Saxons in 449 to the year 1298, in or about which year it appears that he died. The latter portion of this history (the whole of the reign of Edward I. more especially) is of great value, as the writer was contemporary with the events which he records. An Appendix contains several illustrative documents connected with the previous narrative.

17. Brut y Tywysogion; or, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. John Williams ab Ithel, M.A. 1860.

This work, also known as "The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales," has been attributed to Caradoc of Llancarvan, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. It is written in the ancient Welsh language, begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A Collection of Royal and Historical Letters during the Reign of Henry IV. 1399–1404. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

This volume, like all the others in the series containing a miscellaneous selection of letters, is valuable on account of the light it throws upon biographical history, and the familiar view it presents of characters, manners, and events. The period requires much elucidation; to which it will materially contribute.

19. The Repressor of over much Blaming of the Clergy. By Reginald Pecock, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological disquisition of which our English prose literature can boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. While Bishop of St. Asaph, he zealously defended his brother prelates from the attacks of those who censured the bishops for their neglect of duty. He maintained that it was no part of a bishop's functions to appear in the pulpit, and that his time might be more profitably spent, and his dignity better maintained, in the performance of works of a higher character. Among those who thought differently were the Lollards, and against their general doctrines the "Repressor" is directed. Pecock took up a position midway between that of the Roman Church and that of the modern Anglican Church; but his work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards and of the arguments by which they were supported, and because it assists us to ascertain the state of feeling which ultimately led to the Reformation. Apart from religious matters, the light thrown upon contemporaneous history is very small, but the "Repressor" has great value for the philologist, as it tells us what were the characteristics of the language in use among the cultivated Englishmen of the fifteenth century. Pecock, though an opponent of the Lollards, showed a certain spirit of toleration, for which he received, towards the end of his life, the usual mediæval reward—persecution.

20. Annales Cambriæ. Edited by the Rev. John Williams ab Ithel, M.A. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commence in the year 447, and come down to the year 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle, which was also used by Tigernach, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster. During its first century it contains scarcely anything relating to Britain, the earliest direct concurrence with English history is relative to the mission of Augustine. Its notices throughout, though brief, are valuable. The annals were probably written at St. Davids, by Blegewryd, Archdeacon of Llandaff, the most learned man in his day in all Cymru.

21. The Works of Giraldus Cambrensis. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V. and VI. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861–1873.

These volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John, and attempted to re-establish the independence of Wales by restoring the see of St. Davids to its ancient primacy. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable chiefly for the racy and original anecdotes which they contain relating to contemporaries. He is the only Welsh writer of any importance who has contributed so much to the mediæval literature of this country, or assumed, in consequence of his nationality, so free and independent a tone. His frequent travels in Italy, in France, in Ireland, and in Wales, gave him opportunities for observation which did not generally fall to the lot of mediæval writers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and of these observations Giraldus has made due use. Only extracts from these treatises have been printed before, and almost all of them are taken from unique manuscripts.

The Topographia Hibernica (in Vol. V.) is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland. The first in the year 1183, the second in 1185–6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. Curious as this treatise is, Mr. Dimock is of opinion that it ought not to be accepted as sober truthful history, for Giraldus himself states that truth was not his main object, and that he compiled the work for the purpose of sounding the praises of Henry the Second. Elsewhere, however, he declares that he had stated nothing in the Topographia of the truth of which he was not well assured, either by his own eyesight or by the testimony, with all diligence elicited, of the most trustworthy and authentic men in the country; that though he did not put just the same full faith in their reports as in what he had himself seen, yet, as they only related what they had themselves seen, he could not but believe such credible witnesses. A very interesting portion of this treatise is devoted to the animals of Ireland. It shows that he was a very accurate and acute observer, and his descriptions are given in a way that a scientific naturalist of the present day could hardly improve upon. The Expugnatio Hibernica was written about the year 1188 and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of acts occurring in his own days. No one can peruse it without coming to the conclusion that it is rather a poetical fiction than a prosaic truthful history.

Vol. VI. contains the Itinerarium Kambriæ et Descriptio Kambriæ.

22. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE WARS OF THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY THE SIXTH, KING OF ENGLAND. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861–1864.

The letters and papers contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from originals or contemporary copies extant in the Bibliothèque Impériale, and the Depôt des Archives, in Paris. They illustrate the line of policy adopted by John Duke of Bedford and his successors during their government of Normandy, and such other provinces of France as had been acquired by Henry V. We may here trace, step by step, the gradual declension of the English power, until we are prepared to read of its final overthrow.

23. THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE, ACCORDING TO THE SEVERAL ORIGINAL AUTHORITIES. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by BENJAMIN THORPE, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

This Chronicle, extending from the earliest history of Britain to the year 1154, is justly the boast of England; for no other nation can produce any history, written in its own vernacular, at all approaching it, either in antiquity, truthfulness, or extent, the historical books of the Bible alone excepted. There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In this edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography, whether arising from locality or age.

24. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGNS OF RICHARD III. AND HENRY VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1861–1863.

The Papers are derived from MSS. in the Public Record Office, the British Museum, and other repositories. The period to which they refer is unusually destitute of chronicles and other sources of historical information, so that the light obtained from these documents is of special importance. The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III.; correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. LETTERS OF BISHOP GROSSETESTE, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The Letters of Robert Grosseteste (131 in number) are here collected from various sources, and a large portion of them is printed for the first time. They range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III., but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop.

26. DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066–1200. Vol. III.; 1200–1327. By Sir THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, D.C.L., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862–1871.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. This arrangement has two advantages; the materials for any given period may be seen at a glance; and if the reader knows the time when an author wrote, and the number of years that had elapsed between the date of the events and the time the writer flourished, he will generally be enabled to form a fair estimate of the comparative value of the narrative itself. A brief analysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which the original portions are distinguished from those which are mere compilations. When possible, the sources are indicated from which such compilations have been derived. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice has also been given of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. ROYAL AND OTHER HISTORICAL LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGN OF HENRY III. Vol. I., 1216–1235. Vol. II., 1236–1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. SHIRLEY, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862–1866.

The letters contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from the ancient correspondence formerly in the Tower of London, and now in the Public Record Office. They illustrate the political history of England during the growth of its liberties, and throw considerable light upon the personal history of Simon de Montfort. The affairs of France form the subject of many of them, especially in regard to the province of Gascony. The entire collection consists of nearly 700 documents, the greater portion of which is printed for the first time.

28. CHRONICA MONASTERII S. ALBANI.—1. THOMÆ WALSINGHAM HISTORIA ANGLICANA; Vol. I., 1272–1381: Vol. II., 1381–1422. 2. WILLELMI RISHANGER CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259–1307. 3. JOHANNIS DE TROKELOWE ET HENRICI DE BLANEFORDE CHRONICA ET ANNALES, 1259–1296; 1307–1324; 1392–1406. 4. GESTA ABBATUM MONASTERII S. ALBANI, A THOMA WALSINGHAM, REGNANTE RICARDO SECUNDO, EJUSDEM ECCLESIÆ PRÆCENTORE, COMPILATA; Vol. I., 793–1290: Vol. II., 1290–1349: Vol. III., 1349–1411. 5. JOHANNIS AMUNDESHAM, MONACHI MONASTERII S. ALBANI, UT VIDETUR, ANNALES; Vols. I. and II. 6. REGISTRA QUORUNDAM ABBATUM MONASTERII S. ALBANI, QUI SÆCULO XV^mo FLORUERE; Vol. I., REGISTRUM ABBATIÆ JOHANNIS WHETHAMSTEDE, ABBATIS MONASTERII SANCTI ALBANI, ITERUM SUSCEPTÆ; ROBERTO BLAKENEY, CAPELLANO, QUONDAM ADSCRIPTUM: Vol. II., REGISTRA JOHANNIS WHETHAMSTEDE, WILLELMI ALBON, ET WILLELMI WALINGFORDE, ABBATUM MONASTERII SANCTI ALBANI, CUM APPENDICE, CONTINENTE QUASDAM EPISTOLAS, A JOHANNE WHETHAMSTEDE CONSCRIPTAS. 7. YPODIGMA NEUSTRIÆ, A THOMA WALSINGHAM, QUONDAM MONACHO MONASTERII S. ALBANI, CONSCRIPTUM. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Cambridge and Oxford; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863–1876.

In the first two volumes is a History of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., by Thomas Walsingham, Precentor of St. Albans, from MS. VII. in the Arundel Collection in the College of Arms, London, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, collated with MS. 13 E. IX. in the King's Library in the British Museum, and MS. VII. in the Parker Collection of Manuscripts at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the third volume is a Chronicle of English History, attributed to William Rishanger, who lived in the reign of Edward I., from the Cotton. MS. Faustina B. IX. in the British Museum, collated with MS. 14 C. VII. (fols. 219–231) in the King's Library, British Museum, and the Cotton MS. Claudius E. III., fols. 306–331: an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol, 1291–1292, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., also attributed to William Rishanger, but on no sufficient ground: a short Chronicle of English History, 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI. : a short Chronicle, Willelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi, Regis Angliæ, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library, and MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., with Annales Regum Angliæ, probably by the same hand: and fragments of three Chronicles of English History, 1285 to 1307.

In the fourth volume is a Chronicle of English History, 1259 to 1296, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI. : Annals of Edward II., 1307 to 1323, by John de Trokelowe, a monk of St. Albans, and a continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henry de Blaneforde, both from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: a full Chronicle of English History, 1392 to 1406, from MS. VII. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and an account of the Benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the fifteenth century, from MS. VI. in the same Library.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh volumes contain a history of the Abbots of St. Albans, 793 to 1411, mainly compiled by Thomas Walsingham, from MS. Cotton. Claudius E. IV., in the British Museum : with a Continuation, from the closing pages of Parker MS. VII., in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

The eighth and ninth volumes, in continuation of the Annals, contain a Chronicle, probably by John Amundesham, a monk of St. Albans.

The tenth and eleventh volumes relate especially to the acts and proceedings of Abbots Whethamstede, Albon, and Wallingford, and may be considered as a memorial of the chief historical and domestic events during those periods.

The twelfth volume contains a compendious History of England to the reign of Henry V., and of Normandy in early times, also by Thomas Walsingham, and dedicated to Henry V. The compiler has often substituted other authorities in place of those consulted in the preparation of his larger work.

29. Chronicon Abbatiæ Eveshamensis, Auctoribus Dominico Priore Eveshamiæ et Thoma de Marleberge Abbate, a Fundatione ad Annum 1213, una cum Continuatione ad Annum 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. Macray, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.

The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery from its foundation by Egwin, about 690, to the year 1418. Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey, such as but rarely has been recorded. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history which will be read with much interest. This work exists in a single MS., and is for the first time printed.

30. Ricardi de Cirencestria Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Angliæ. Vol. I., 447–871. Vol. II., 872–1066. Edited by John E. B. Mayor, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863–1869.

The compiler, Richard of Cirencester, was a monk of Westminster, 1355–1400. In 1391 he obtained a licence to make a pilgrimage to Rome. His history, in four books, extends from 447 to 1066. He announces his intention of continuing it, but there is no evidence that he completed any more. This chronicle gives many charters in favour of Westminster Abbey, and a very full account of the lives and miracles of the saints, especially of Edward the Confessor, whose reign occupies the fourth book. A treatise on the Coronation, by William of Sudbury, a monk of Westminster, fills book iii. c. 3. It was on this author that C. J. Bertram fathered his forgery, De Situ Brittaniæ, in 1747.

31. Year Books of the Reign of Edward the First. Years 20–21, 21–22, 30–31, and 32–33. Edited and translated by Alfred John Horwood, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863–1873.

The volumes known as the "Year Books" contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the Courts of Common Law. They may be considered to a great extent as the "lex non scripta" of England, and have been held in the highest veneration by the ancient sages of the law, and were received by them as the repositories of the first recorded judgments and dicta of the great legal luminaries of past ages. They are also worthy of the attention of the general reader on account of the historical information and the notices of public and private persons which they contain, as well as the light which they throw on ancient manners and customs.

32. Narratives of the Expulsion of the English from Normandy, 1449–1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normendie, par Berry, Hérault du Roy: Conferences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.

This volume contains the narrative of an eye-witness who details with considerable power and minuteness the circumstances which attended the final expulsion of the English from Normandy in the year 1450. The history commences with the infringement of the truce by the capture of Fougères, and ends with the battle of Formigny and the embarkation of the Duke of Somerset. The whole period embraced is less than two years.

33. Historia et Cartularium Monasterii S. Petri Gloucestriæ. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. Hart, Esq., F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863–1867.

This work consists of two parts, the History and the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Peter, Gloucester. The history furnishes an account of the monastery from its foundation, in the year 681, to the early part of the reign of Richard II., together with a calendar of donations and benefactions. It treats principally of the affairs of the monastery, but occasionally matters of general history are introduced. Its authorship has generally been assigned to Walter Froucester, the twentieth abbot, but without any foundation.

34. Alexandri Neckam de Naturis Rerum libri duo; with Neckam's Poem, De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1863.

Neckam was a man who devoted himself to science, such as it was in the twelfth century. In the "De Naturis Rerum" are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam was not thought infallible, even by his contemporaries, for Roger Bacon remarks of him, "this Alexander in many things wrote what was true and useful; "but he neither can nor ought by just title to be reckoned among authorities." Neckam, however, had sufficient independence of thought to differ from some of the schoolmen who in his time considered themselves the only judges of literature. He had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws much light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth century. The poem entitled "De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ" appears to be a metrical paraphrase or abridgment of the "De Naturis Rerum." It is written in the elegiac metre; and though there are many lines which violate classical rules, it is, as a whole, above the ordinary standard of mediæval Latin.

35. Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft of Early England; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. Oswald Cockayne, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864–1866.

This work illustrates not only the history of science, but the history of superstition. In addition to the information bearing directly upon the medical skill and medical faith of the times, there are many passages which incidentally throw light upon the general mode of life and ordinary diet. The volumes are interesting not only in their scientific, but also in their social aspect. The manuscripts from which they have been printed are valuable to the Anglo-Saxon scholar for the illustrations they afford of Anglo-Saxon orthography.

36. ANNALES MONASTICI. Vol. I.:—Annales de Margan, 1066–1232; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066–1263; Annales de Burton, 1004–1263. Vol. II.:—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519–1277; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1–1291. Vol. III.:—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1–1297; Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia, 1042–1432. Vol. IV.:—Annales Monasterii de Oseneia, 1016–1347; Chronicon vulgo dictum Chronicon Thomæ Wykes, 1066–1289; Annales Prioratus de Wigornia, 1–1377. Vol. V.:—Index and Glossary. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registrary of the University, Cambridge. 1864–1869.

The present collection of Monastic Annals embraces all the more important chronicles compiled in religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are ten in number. The extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432, although they refer more especially to the reigns of John, Henry III., and Edward I. Some of these narratives have already appeared in print, but others are printed for the first time.

37. MAGNA VITA S. HUGONIS EPISCOPI LINCOLNIENSIS. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rev. JAMES F. DIMOCK, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work contains a number of very curious and interesting incidents, and being the work of a contemporary, is very valuable, not only as a truthful biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic, but as the work of a man, who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs. The author, in all probability, was Adam Abbot of Evesham. He was domestic chaplain and private confessor of Bishop Hugh, and in these capacities was admitted to the closest intimacy. Bishop Hugh was Prior of Witham for 11 years before he became Bishop of Lincoln. His consecration took place on the 21st September 1186; he died on the 16th of November 1200; and was canonized in 1220.

38. CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF RICHARD THE FIRST. Vol. I.:—ITINERARIUM PEREGRINORUM ET GESTA REGIS RICARDI. Vol. II.:—EPISTOLÆ CANTUARIENSES; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury; 1187 to 1199. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864–1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London. The narrative extends from 1187 to 1199; but its chief interest consists in the minute and authentic narrative which it furnishes of the exploits of Richard I., from his departure from England in December 1189 to his death in 1199. The author states in his prologue that he was an eye-witness of much that he records; and various incidental circumstances which occur in the course of the narrative confirm this assertion.

The letters in Vol. II., written between 1187 and 1199, are of value as furnishing authentic materials for the history of the ecclesiastical condition of England during the reign of Richard I. They had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury, who saw in it a design to supplant them in their function of metropolitan chapter. These letters are printed, for the first time, from a MS. belonging to the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth.

39. RECUEIL DES CRONIQUES ET ANCHIENNES ISTORIES DE LA GRANT BRETAIGNE A PRESENT NOMME ENGLETERRE, par JEHAN DE WAURIN. Vol. I.

Albina to 688. Vol. II., 1399–1422 Edited by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864–1868.

40. A COLLECTION OF THE CHRONICLES AND ANCIENT HISTORIES OF GREAT BRITAIN, NOW CALLED ENGLAND, by JOHN DE WAVRIN. Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding Vol. I.) Edited and translated by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

This curious chronicle extends from the fabulous period of history down to the return of Edward IV. to England in the year 1471, after the second deposition of Henry VI. The manuscript from which the text of the work is taken is preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, and is believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy in existence. The work, as originally bound, was comprised in six volumes, since rebound in morocco in 12 volumes, folio maximo, vellum, and is illustrated with exquisite miniatures, vignettes, and initial letters. It was written towards the end of the fifteenth century, having been expressly executed for Louis de Bruges, Seigneur de la Gruthuyse and Earl of Winchester, from whose cabinet it passed into the library of Louis XII. at Blois.

41. POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Vols. III., IV., V., and VI. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH RAWSON LUMBY, B.D., Vicar of St. Edward's, Cambridge, Fellow of St. Catharine's College, and late Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. 1865–1876.

This is one of the many mediæval chronicles which assume the character of a history of the world. It begins with the creation, and is brought down to the author's own time, the reign of Edward III. Prefixed to the historical portion, is a chapter devoted to geography, in which is given a description of every known land. To say that the Polychronicon was written in the fourteenth century is to say that it is not free from inaccuracies. It has, however, a value apart from its intrinsic merits. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth. The differences between Trevisa's version and that of the unknown writer are often considerable.

42. LE LIVERE DE REIS DE BRITTANIE E LE LIVERE DE REIS DE ENGLETERE. Edited by JOHN GLOVER, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treatises, though they cannot rank as independent narratives, are nevertheless valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians, especially "Le Livere de Reis de Engletere." Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonized French.

It is supposed that Peter of Ickham must have been the author, but no certain conclusion on that point has been arrived at.

43. CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by EDWARD AUGUSTUS BOND, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866–1868.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is both curious and valuable. It is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country. In addition to the private affairs of the monastery, some light is thrown upon the public events of the time, which are however kept distinct, and appear at he end of the history of each abbot's administration. The text has been printed from what is said to be the autograph of the original compiler, Thomas de Burton, the nineteenth abbot.

44. MATTHÆI PARISIENSIS HISTORIA ANGLORUM, SIVE, UT VULGO DICITUR, HISTORIA MINOR. Vols. I., II., and III. 1067–1253. Edited by Sir FREDERIC MADDEN, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866–1869.

The exact date at which this work was written is, according to the chronicler, 1250. The history is of considerable value as an illustration of the period during which the author lived, and contains a good summary of the events which followed the Conquest. This minor chronicle is, however, based on another work (also written by Matthew Paris) giving fuller details, which has been called the "Historia Major." The chronicle here published, nevertheless, gives some information not to be found in the greater history.

45. LIBER MONASTERII DE HYDA: A CHRONICLE AND CHARTULARY OF HYDE ABBEY, WINCHESTER, 455–1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by EDWARD EDWARDS, Esq. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify—either from tradition or from sources of information not now discoverable—the statements, which, in substance, he adopts. He also mentions, and frequently quotes from writers whose works are either entirely lost or at present known only by fragments. There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval English.

46. CHRONICON SCOTORUM: A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, from the EARLIEST TIMES to 1135; with a SUPPLEMENT, containing the Events from 1141 to 1150. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1866.

There is, in this volume, a legendary account of the peopling of Ireland and of the adventures which befell the various heroes who are said to have been connected with Irish history. The details are, however, very meagre both for this period and for the time when history becomes more authentic. The plan adopted in the chronicle gives the appearance of an accuracy to which the earlier portions of the work cannot have any claim. The succession of events is marked, year by year, from A.M. 1599 to A.D. 1150. The principal events narrated in the later portion of the work are, the invasions of foreigners, and the wars of the Irish among themselves. The text has been printed from a MS. preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, written partly in Latin, partly in Irish.

47. THE CHRONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vols. I. and II. Edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1866–1868.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and that he lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum," in the second, a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, down to the death of Henry III., and in the third a history of the reign of Edward I. The principal object of the work was apparently to show the justice of Edward's Scottish wars. The language is singularly corrupt, and a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. THE WAR OF THE GAEDHIL WITH THE GAILL, or, THE INVASIONS OF IRELAND BY THE DANES AND OTHER NORSEMEN. Edited, with a Translation, by JAMES HENTHORN TODD D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University. Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an undoubtedly ancient original. That it was compiled from contemporary materials has been proved by curious incidental evidence. It is stated in the account given of the battle of Clontarf that the full tide in Dublin Bay on the day of the battle (23 April 1014) coincided with sunrise; and that the returning tide in the evening aided considerably in the defeat of the Danes. The fact has been verified by astronomical calculations, and the inference is that the author of the chronicle, if not himself an eye-witness, must have derived his information from those who were eye-witnesses. The contents of the work are sufficiently described in its title. The story is told after the manner of the Scandinavian Sagas, with poems and fragments of poems introduced into the prose narrative.

49. GESTA REGIS HENRICI SECUNDI BENEDICTI ABBATIS. THE CHRONICLE OF THE REIGNS OF HENRY II. AND RICHARD I., 1169–1192; known under the name of BENEDICT OF PETERBOROUGH. Vols. I. and II. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

This chronicle of the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., known commonly under the name of Benedict of Peterborough, is one of the best existing specimens of a class of historical compositions of the first importance to the student.

50. MUNIMENTA ACADEMICA, OR, DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ACADEMICAL LIFE AND STUDIES AT OXFORD (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. HENRY ANSTEY, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

This work will supply materials for a History of Academical Life and Studies in the University of Oxford during the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries.

51. CHRONICA MAGISTRI ROGERI DE HOUEDENE. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1868–1871.

This work has long been justly celebrated, but not thoroughly understood until Mr. Stubbs' edition. The earlier portion, extending from 732 to 1148, appears to be a copy of a compilation made in Northumbria about 1161, to which Hoveden added little. From 1148 to 1169—a very valuable portion of this work—the matter is derived from another source, to which Hoveden appears to have supplied little, and not always judiciously. From 1170 to 1192 is the portion which corresponds with the Chronicle known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough (see No. 49); but it is not a copy, being sometimes an abridgment, at others a paraphrase; occasionally the two works entirely agree; showing that both writers had access to the same materials, but dealt with them differently. From 1192 to 1201 may be said to be wholly Hoveden's work: it is extremely valuable, and an authority of the first importance.

52. WILLELMI MALMESBIRIENSIS MONACHI DE GESTIS PONTIFICUM ANGLORUM LIBRI QUINQUE. Edited, from William of Malmesbury's Autograph MS., by N. E. S. A. HAMILTON, Esq., of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1870.

William of Malmesbury's "Gesta Pontificum" is the principal foundation of English Ecclesiastical Biography, down to the year 1122. The manuscript which has been followed in this Edition is supposed by Mr. Hamilton to be the author's autograph, containing his latest additions and amendments.

53. HISTORIC AND MUNICIPAL DOCUMENTS OF IRELAND, FROM THE ARCHIVES OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN, &c. 1172–1320. Edited by JOHN T. GILBERT, Esq., F.S.A., Secretary of the Public Record Office of Ireland. 1870.

A collection of original documents, elucidating mainly the history and condition of the municipal, middle, and trading classes under or in relation with the rule of England in Ireland,—a subject hitherto in almost total obscurity. Extending over the first hundred and fifty years of the Anglo-Norman settlement, the series includes charters, municipal laws and regulations, rolls of names of citizens and members of merchant-guilds, lists of commodities with their rates, correspondence, illustrations of relations between ecclesiastics and laity; together with many documents exhibiting the state of Ireland during the presence there of the Scots under Robert and Edward Bruce.

54. THE ANNALS OF LOCH CÉ. A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, FROM 1014 to 1590. Vols. I. and II. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1871.

The original of this chronicle has passed under various names. The title of "Annals of Loch Cé" was given to it by Professor O'Curry, on the ground that it was transcribed for Brian Mac Dermot, an Irish chieftain, who resided on an island in Loch Cé, in the county of Roscommon. It adds much to the materials for the civil and ecclesiastical history of Ireland; and contains many curious references to English and foreign affairs, not noticed in any other chronicle.

55. MONUMENTA JURIDICA. THE BLACK BOOK OF THE ADMIRALTY, WITH APPENDICES. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by SIR TRAVERS TWISS, Q.C., D.C.L. 1871–1876.

This book contains the ancient ordinances and laws relating to the navy, and was probably compiled for the use of the Lord High Admiral of England. Selden calls it the "jewel of the Admiralty Records." Prynne ascribes to the Black Book the same authority in the Admiralty as the Black and Red Books have in the Court of Exchequer, and most English writers on maritime law recognize its importance.

56. MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VI.:—OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THOMAS BEKYNTON, SECRETARY TO HENRY VI., AND BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS. Edited, from a MS. in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth, with an Appendix of Illustrative Documents, by the Rev. GEORGE WILLIAMS, B.D., Vicar of Ringwood, late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. Vols. I. and II. 1872.

These curious volumes are of a very miscellaneous character, and were probably compiled under the immediate direction of Bekynton before he had attained to the Episcopate. They contain many of the Bishop's own letters, and several written by him in the King's name; as well as letters sent to himself while he was the Royal Secretary, and others addressed to the King. This work elucidates some obscure points in the history of the nation during the first half of the fifteenth century.

57. MATTHÆI PARISIENSIS, MONACHI SANCTI ALBANI, CHRONICA MAJORA. Vol. I. The Creation to A.D. 1066. Vol. II. A.D. 1067 to A.D. 1216. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Registrary of the University, and Vicar of Great St. Mary's, Cambridge. 1872–1874.

This work contains the "Chronica Majora" of Matthew Paris, one of the most valuable and frequently consulted of the ancient English Chronicles. It is published from its commencement, for the first time. The editions by Archbishop Parker, and William Wats, severally begin at the Norman Conquest.

58. MEMORIALE FRATRIS WALTERI DE COVENTRIA.—THE HISTORICAL COLLECTIONS OF WALTER OF COVENTRY. Vols. I. and II. Edited, from the MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1872–1873.

This work, now printed in full for the first time, has long been a desideratum by Historical Scholars. The first portion, however, is not of much importance, being only a compilation from earlier writers. The part relating to the first quarter of the thirteenth century is the most valuable and interesting.

59. THE ANGLO-LATIN SATIRICAL POETS AND EPIGRAMMATISTS OF THE TWELFTH CENTURY. Vols. I. and II. Now first collected and edited by THOMAS WRIGHT, Esq., M.A., Corresponding Member of the National Institute of France (Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres). 1872.

The Poems contained in these volumes have long been known and appreciated as the best satires of the age in which their authors flourished, and were deservedly popular during the 13th and 14th centuries.

60. MATERIALS FOR A HISTORY OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VII., FROM ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS PRESERVED IN THE PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE,

Vol. I. Edited by the Rev. WILLIAM CAMPBELL, M.A., one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools. 1873.

This volume is valuable as illustrating the acts and proceedings of Henry VII. on ascending the throne, and shadows out the policy he afterwards adopted.

61. HISTORICAL PAPERS AND LETTERS FROM THE NORTHERN REGISTERS. Edited by JAMES RAINE, M.A., Canon of York, and Secretary of the Surtees Society. 1873.

The documents in this volume illustrate, for the most part, the general history of the north of England, particularly in its relation to Scotland.

62. REGISTRUM PALATINUM DUNELMENSE. THE REGISTER OF RICHARD DE KELLAWE, LORD PALATINE AND BISHOP OF DURHAM; 1311-1316. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by Sir THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, D.C.L., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1873–1875.

Bishop Kellawe's Register contains the proceedings of his prelacy, both lay and ecclesiastical, and is the earliest Register of the Palatinate of Durham.

63. MEMORIALS OF SAINT DUNSTAN ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. Edited, from various MSS., by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1874.

This volume contains several lives of Archbishop Dunstan, one of the most celebrated Primates of Canterbury. They open various points of Historical and Literary interest, without which our knowledge of the period would be more incomplete than it is at present.

64. CHRONICON ANGLIÆ, AB ANNO DOMINI 1328 USQUE AD ANNUM 1388, AUCTORE MONACHO QUODAM SANCTI ALBANI. Edited by EDWARD MAUNDE THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and Assistant-Keeper of the Manuscripts in the British Museum. 1874.

This chronicle gives a circumstantial history of the close of the reign of Edward III. which has hitherto been considered lost.

65. THÓMAS SAGA ERKIBYSKUPS. A LIFE OF ARCHBISHOP THOMAS BECKET, IN ICELANDIC. Vol. I. Edited, with English Translation, Notes, and Glossary, by M. EIRÍKR MAGNÚSSON, Sub-Librarian of the University Library, Cambridge. 1875.

This work is derived from the Life of Becket written by Benedict of Peterborough, and apparently supplies the missing portions in Benedict's biography.

66. RADULPHI DE COGGESHALL CHRONICON ANGLICANUM. Edited by the REV. JOSEPH STEVENSON, M.A. 1875.

This volume contains the "Chronicon Anglicanum," by Ralph of Coggeshall, the "Libellus de Expugnatione Terræ Sanctæ per Saladinum," usually ascribed to the same author, and other pieces of an interesting character.

67. MATERIALS FOR THE HISTORY OF THOMAS BECKET, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. JAMES CRAIGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., Canon of Canterbury. 1875–1876.

This Publication, when completed, will comprise all contemporary materials for the history of Archbishop Thomas Becket. The first volume contains the life of that celebrated man, and the miracles after his death, by William, a monk of Canterbury. The second volume contains the life by Benedict of Peterborough; John of Salisbury; Alan of Tewkesbury; and Edward Grim.

68. RADULFI DE DICETO DECANI LUNDONIENSIS OPERA HISTORICA. THE HISTORICAL WORKS OF MASTER RALPH DE DICETO, DEAN OF LONDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited, from the Original Manuscripts, by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., M.R.I.A., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford, Fellow of Oriel College, and Rector of Cholderton. 1876.

The Historical Works of Ralph de Diceto are some of the most valuable materials for British History. The Abbreviationes Chronicorum extend from the Creation to 1147, and the Ymagines Historiarum to 1201.

WORKS PUBLISHED IN PHOTOZINCOGRAPHY.

Domesday Book, or the Great Survey of England of William the Conqueror, 1086; fac-simile of the Part relating to each county, separately (with a few exceptions of double counties). Photozincographed, by Her Majesty's Command, at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., F.R.S., &c., Director. 35 Parts, imperial quarto and demy quarto (1861–1863) boards. Price 4*s.* 6*d.* to 1*l.* 1*s.* each Part, according to size; or, bound in 2 Vols., 18*l.*

This important and unique survey of the greater portion of England* is the oldest and most valuable record in the national archives. It was commenced about the year 1084 and finished in 1086. Its compilation was determined upon at Gloucester by William the Conqueror, in council, in order that he might know what was due to him, in the way of tax, from his subjects, and that each at the same time might know what he had to pay. It was compiled as much for their protection as for the benefit of the sovereign. The nobility and people had been grievously distressed at the time by the king bringing over large numbers of French and Bretons, and quartering them on his subjects, "each according to the measure of his land," for the purpose of resisting the invasion of Cnut, King of Denmark, which was apprehended. The commissioners appointed to make the survey were to inquire the name of each place; who held it in the time of King Edward the Confessor; the present possessor; how many hides were in the manor; how many ploughs were in demesne; how many homagers; how many villeins; how many cottars; how many serving men; how many free tenants; how many tenants in soccage; how much wood, meadow, and pasture; the number of mills and fish-ponds; what had been added or taken away from the place; what was the gross value in the time of Edward the Confessor; the present value; and how much each free-man or soc-man had, and whether any advance could be made in the value. Thus could be ascertained who held the estate in the time of King Edward; who then held it; its value in the time of the late king; and its value as it stood at the formation of the survey. So minute was the survey, that the writer of the contemporary portion of the Saxon Chronicle records, with some asperity—"So very narrowly he caused it to be traced out, that there was not a single hide, nor one virgate of land, nor even, it is shame to tell, though it seemed to him no shame to do, an ox, nor a cow, nor a swine was left, that was not set down."

Domesday Survey is in two parts or volumes. The first, in folio, contains the counties of Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester and Lancaster, Cornwall, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Herts, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester and Rutland, Lincoln, Middlesex, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, Worcester, and York. The second volume, in quarto, contains the counties of Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

Domesday Book was printed verbatim et literatim during the last century, in consequence of an address of the House of Lords to King George III. in 1767. It was not, however, commenced until 1773, and was completed early in 1783. In 1860, Her Majesty's Government, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, determined to apply the art of photozincography to the production of a fac-simile of Domesday Book, under the superintendence of Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., Director of the Ordnance Survey, Southampton. The fac-simile was completed in 1863.

*For some reason left unexplained, many parts were left unsurveyed; Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Durham, are not described in the survey; nor does Lancashire appear under its proper name; but Furness, and the northern part of Lancashire, as well as the south of Westmoreland, with a part of Cumberland, are included within the West Riding of Yorkshire. That part of Lancashire which lies between the Ribble and Mersey, and which at the time of the survey comprehended 688 manors, is joined to Cheshire. Part of Rutland is described in the counties of Northampton and Lincoln.

FAC-SIMILES of NATIONAL MANUSCRIPTS, from WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR to QUEEN ANNE, selected under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, and Photozincographed, by Command of Her Majesty, by Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., Director of the Ordnance Survey. Price, each Part, with translations and notes, double foolscap folio, 16*s*.

Part I. (William the Conqueror to Henry VII.). 1865.
Part II. (Henry VIII. and Edward VI.). 1866.
Part III. (Mary and Elizabeth). 1867.
Part IV. (James I. to Anne). 1868.

The first Part extends from William the Conqueror to Henry VII., and contains autographs of the kings of England, as well as of many other illustrious personages famous in history, and some interesting charters, letters patent, and state papers. The second Part, for the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., consists principally of holograph letters and autographs of kings, princes, statesmen, and other persons of great historical interest, who lived during those reigns. The third Part contains similar documents for the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, including a signed bill of Lady Jane Grey. The fourth Part concludes the series, and comprises a number of documents taken from the originals belonging to the Constable of the Tower of London; also several records illustrative of the Gunpowder Plot, and a woodcut containing portraits of Mary Queen of Scots and James VI., circulated by their adherents in England, 1580-3.
